Russia as Kill-Joy.
Smoking and Flying.
1-3 of a Billion.
Sheba's Camel.

—By Arthur Brisbane—

WITH the peace dove at the top of his perch, big nations that don't want prosperity disturbed by war congratulating each other, along comes Russia, all out of tune.

The Chinese, say Russians, are guilty of "provocative acts."

Russian citizens in China have been beaten and tortured. "It is a daily occurrence." Severe punishments are inflicted on Russian laborers.

"Peace, peace, and there is no peace."

Two friends, one smoking cigars, the other cigarettes, sat side by side in an airplane yesterday, looking down on pleasant St. Louis and each earning $100 an hour, occasionally "stunting" close to the ground.

Jackson and O'Brine, the two fliers, getting $2900 a day, say they will stay up until they reach 500 hours.

Commercial planes are interested in the refueling proposition. Major Young, aeronautics director of the Department of Commerce, believes that transcontinental planes, refueling at intervals, will cross the continent without stopping, carrying 1800 pounds more cargo and 1800 pounds less gasoline.

Investors with money seem to think that the stock in American Telephone & Telegraph Co., affectionately known as "A. T. & T." is a good property. The value of the 12,900,000 shares outstanding has increased this week by $335,319,564.

A third of a billion in five days is not bad.

The Queen of Sheba, with all her wealth, rolled and lurched on a camel's back when she visited King Solomon.

What would she think of a new taxicab that Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., head of General Motors, presents for the approval of Mayor Walker, in New York city?

This taxi will carry six passengers beside the driver, looks "like a million dollars" on the outside, and inside is a radio to amuse the passenger on his journey, and the chauffeur in his idle moments.

Great is advertising power. The name Waldorf Astoria, so well advertised throughout the country, makes way for a new Waldorf on Park Ave., covering a whole block, costing $18,000,000. The architects, Schultze and Weaver, and L. J. Horowitz, the builder, announce features that will interest out of town builders. Including a siding for private cars under the hotel, roadways enabling guests to step from their automobiles into elevators, a ballroom four stories high and 2200 rooms.

Manufacturers of silk and other stockings hope that advertising will enable them to drive out the "bare leg craze" now afflicting lovely woman.

Moralizing appeals to modest refinement won't do. Bare legs must be banished, as the almost universal habit of chewing tobacco was banished by public opinion.

Make women realize that an imitation of a butcher shop is not artistic, and they will go back to stockings.

Cabinet Quits With Poincare

CALLS UPON BRIAND TO BE PREMIER

French Foreign Minister Is Summoned to Elysee Palace to Form Cabinet

Paris, July 27 (AP)—Aristide Poincare, Foreign Minister, was called to the Elysee Palace late today, this being considered tantamount to announcement he had been called to form a cabinet.

Paris, July 27 (AP)—The French cabinet resigned in a body shortly before noon today after Raymond Poincare, premier, refused to reconsider his own decision to resign.

An impending operation made necessary by exhaustion and fatigue from his long fight for the debt agreement with America, was behind the premier's action.

ENTIRE CABINET QUITS.

The cabinet's resignation was handed to President Doumergue, who presided at the meeting, by Louis Barthou, acting premier, who drafted a letter reading as follows:

"The efforts we have made with M. Poincare to persuade him in the interests of his country to retain direction of public affairs has not met with the result we had hoped.

"We must bow to his decision with the regret of not being able

Fox, Recovering, to Go Home Tomorrow

Mineola, N. Y., July 27 (AP)—William Fox, movie producer, who was seriously injured in an automobile accident July 17, will leave the Nassau Hospital tomorrow for his home, hospital attendants announced today.

DAVID A. ELLIS, HUB LEADER, DIES AT 56

End of Prominent Educator and Attorney Is Sudden; Funeral Set for Monday

David A. Ellis, at one time chairman of the Boston School Committee and more recently on the Public Utilities Commission, died today at the Beth Israel Hospital after a short illness. He is survived by his wife and a daughter, Mildred.

Burial will take place Monday at 2:30 p. m., with services at Temple Israel chapel, Wakefield.

Mr. Ellis, an attorney and educator, was born in Buffalo, on Feb. 20, 1873, but came to Boston so early in life that the Hub was the only place he regarded as home. He was graduated from Harvard Law School in 1896 and almost immediately engaged in public service. In 1902 he was elected to the Boston school committee and for a long period of service he was a devoted and ardent worker for the development and growth of educational projects in the city.

During the war he was chairman of the city fuel committee. His civic activities kept him for long in the public eye. He strongly defended the teachers' pension bill in 1925. In that year he was urged to be a candidate for mayor but declined.

Since 1919, he had been a member of the Public Utilities Commission, resigning in 1926.

His home was at 390 Commonwealth ave.

SUSPENDED YD IN A PLEA FOR OPEN TRIAL

Report in Murray Case Due to Reach Coernor Monday; May Hide Proceedings

A "star chamber" court-martial may try Capt. Samuel E. Murray, accused of drunkenness and brutality at Camp Devens, and hide from the public the facts of the fracas that marked the end of the 26th Division's recent tour of duty.

This was revealed at the State House today when it was learned that order for court-martial proceedings would by no means assure a public hearing of the charges against the military police officer.

Capt. Murray's refusal to testify at the preliminary investigation before Lieut. Col. Comerais and his demand for a public trial by court-martial board may be answered in a secret session, according to officers high in the division.

MAY INJURE YD.

That Adjt.-Gen. Stevens and Governor Allen will decide a court-martial is necessary on the basis of Comerais' report, now in preparation, was almost a foregone conclusion, but it will remain within the power of such a court-martial to decide whether the proceedings shall be public.

While it is contended in some quarters that a secret trial would be wise, in view of recent revela-

Tragedy in Clothes?

FEAR BATHER AT TENEAN BEACH IS DROWNED

Clothing Found in Neat Pile Leads to Wide Search in Dorchester

A missing boy and a pile of boy's clothing on the sands of Tenean Beach gave Dorchester and harbor police, and the coast guard service, a first-class mystery today.

Patrolman James Donahue, patroling the beach, found the clothing at dusk last night. It consisted of blue overalls, brown sneakers, light blue shirt, underwear, checkered golf hose, and felt skull cap. Beside it was a heavy towel.

Apparently some lad had divested himself of his garments and gone in for a swim and drowned. Patrolman Donahue reported to Division 11 and police with searchlights and rubber boats tramped over the sand flats when the tide went down. They found no body.

About an hour later a report was made at the station that Herbert Hefferan, 12, had failed to return to his home at 38 Arbroth st, Dorchester. Hefferan's home is less than a half mile from the beach, and as the size and nature of the clothing found indicated their owner to have been about 12 or 13 years of age police were confident that Hefferan was a victim of drowning.

But an attempt to have Hefferan's parents identify the clothing found as that of their son soon proved that such was not the case, the Hefferan boy, when he left home yesterday afternoon, wore a white shirt, white linen knickers, sport shoes and no hat.

No report of another missing boy has been made to the police.

A police boat from Division 6, harbor and a coast guard patrol boat joined in the search off Tenean Beach today, while Lieut. Mathew Killen, Sergt Cornelius Donovan and Patrolmen Lombard, Kennedy and White tramped along the shore and over the flats until the tide came in.

In the meantime Hefferan was still missing and no body was discovered.

Dispatches from Yokosuka said one of the workmen engaged in reconditioning the battle cruiser Kongo had been shaken from his perch and died of injuries. Three other workmen and two bluejackets were injured seriously.

Mrs. Eva Walker, Brockton nurse, whose intended marriage to John W. Lufkin, wealthy inventor, was frustrated by the courts last December, received $15,000 under his will which was filed for probate today.

The will, made 10 months before Judge Dolan appointed a guardian for the aged inventor on petition of his sister, Miss Elizabeth J. Lufkin, who claimed his property was being wasted, contains a clause voiding the legacy of any heir who may contest it.

Miss Lufkin, whose home is in Squantum, is given $50,000 outright under the terms of the document and receives a quarter share of the property remaining after personal

At that time they had passed the former record mark for endurance flying by 86 hours.

With their third week in the air started, the aviators were confident of attaining their ultimate goal—500 hours of continuous flying.

Optimism was evinced by the fliers in notes dropped during the day.

"Well, Hello, Everybody," said one note. "How is everything down there? Everything is O. K. up here. We feel just fine after two weeks in the air. I believe the motor is running just as good as the day we took off. Just getting nicely broken in."

The day's supply of 60 gallons

COURT-MARTIAL MAY TRY CAPT. MURRAY CHARGES IN SECRET

ALLEN TO GET SECRET PROBE REPORT

Foote Suspends Captain Pending Final Outcome of Investigation

tions, many persons feel that the 26th Division would suffer irreparable injury if further secrecy were thrown about the charges.

The official decision as regards the court-martial will not be made before Monday, it is expected, due to the absence from Boston today of the adjutant-general, through whom Lt.-Col. Comeras' report must pass to the Governor, with his recommendations.

Gen. Stevens and his assistant, Lieut.-Col. Porter R. Chase, were at Sandwich inspecting the First Corps Cadets.

Relieved of command, pending the result of the investigation, Capt. Murray has demanded a public trial, declaring he was "framed" and could prove it. His own counsel will insist that court-martial proceedings be public.

DEFEND MURRAY

Murray, through counsel, however, took an aggressive position. He issued a statement to the effect that he was "framed" and could prove it. He declared that he would insist upon appearing before a general court-martial and would likewise insist that proceedings of the tribunal be open to the public.

Then, and not until then, he said, would he tell the "inside" story of what went on at Camp Devens Friday night, July 19, when, according to his accusers, he beat up three enlisted men in a drunken rage.

Friends and backers of Capt. Murray were outspoken today in their claim that the captain's defense, when made, will throw new and startling light upon "goings-on" at the 26th division's camp.

Although every resource of the National Guard fas exerted to veil the South Armory probe in secrecy, certain portions of the testimony leaked out, including the descriptions of two wild jamborees at Camp Devens, one in which an enlisted man was sentenced by a kangaroo court to stand nude on the camp street while bombarded with streams from fire extinguishers, and another in which a commissioned officer allegedly took a joy ride astride the muzzle of a "borrowed" cannon, drawn by "borrowed" horses, and saluted by guns using "borrowed" ammunition.

PREDICT COURT-MARTIAL

The friends of Capt. Murray maintained today that the captain will be able to demonstrate to the public's satisfaction that his job of being chief of military police at the YD camp was one which calculated to bring embarrassments and enmities upon the most tactful and dutiful of officers.

to continue a collaboration that was accompanied by our admiration and respectful devotion. Therefore we beg you, M. President, kindly to accept our resignation and the expression of our profound respect."

The letter was signed by all the ministers and sub-secretaries.

Prior to appearing at the cabinet meeting, M. Briand, foreign minister, and Louis Barthou, who is vice-premier, had gone to the home of M. Poincare and sought to have him change his mind about leaving the ministry. Their quest was hopeless, however, and they returned with their bad news.

REGRETS RESIGNATION

M. Poincare himself had sent letters announcing his resignation last night both to the cabinet and to President Doumergue. That to the president read:

"The fears that I expressed to you have been realized. It is impossible for me to be restored to health completely without a surgical operation, the preparations for which and the convalescence will condemn me to enforced rest for two or three months.

"I cannot, therefore, especially under the present circumstances, fulfill as I should the functions that you have been good enough to entrust to me the last three years, and I find myself to my deep regret in the necessity of presenting to you my resignation."

preach live and let live. Bombs recently discharged in the loop and elsewhere are said by police to express racketeers' moral indignation. The police have interfered with their "rackets" offensively, and have interfered with graces that separated fools from money.

Racketeers now threaten to "discredit the State's attorney by inaugurating an orgy of crime, bank robbery, kidnaping, bombing outrages, against legitimate business," if their rackets are not left in peace.

New York's police, interested in suppressing speakeasies, have raided more than a dozen of the 32,000 such institutions in the city. But those speakeasies won't "stay raided."

"The Green Room Grill" in New York's theater district, has "the longest bar in the city," running from 48th st. through to 47th st. It was raided, bartenders arrested, liquor taken, eight days ago, and raided again doing business yesterday morning.

If you have to raid one speakeasy half a dozen times, how can you adequately raid 32,000 speakeasies in one city?

This year 8000 airplanes will be licensed in the United States. That's a start. But there is a long way to go before flying becomes real.

Distinguished Jurist Defends Free Press

By SAM BLAIR
Universal Service.

Cleveland, O., July 27.—"A free press is indispensable to a free country. One cannot exist without the other. It would be incredible if Judge Walther's contempt sentence were upheld."

This is the comment of one of the most distinguished jurists in the country upon the recent jail sentence by Common Pleas Judge Frederick Walther of two Cleveland editors, whose paper published an editorial condemning the judge for enjoining the sheriff from interfering with race track gambling.

The jurist, now retired from the bench, requested that his name be withheld from publication, because he did not wish to appear to be influencing a decision of the appellate court, before which an appeal of Walther's sentence is now pending.

"Perhaps this case demonstrates the advantage of election judges, rather than appointing them," he pointed out. "Regardless of the outcome of the appeal, Walther is through after his present term expires. He can never be re-elected to the bench.

"If a judge or his official conduct could not be criticized in the press, it would be possible for him to connive with crooks and get away with it."

Trans-Ocean Freight Plane in Test

By WILLIAM HILLMAN
Universal Service Special Cable

Travemuenden, Germany, July 27 —Three 19-ton tri-motored Rohrbach romar flying yachts, which will form in October the first regular transatlantic freight and mail line in history, have been ordered by the world's greatest air traffic organization.

The gigantic metal sea planes are capable of carrying an 8-ton load on a sustained flight of 2500 miles. These are the first planes ever specifically built for transatlantic service. They will be used for service between Germany and South America.

One of these huge air freighters, carrying a number of observers and newspapermen, flew for more than an hour yesterday, which constituted the ceremonial marking Germany's third great achievement of the week, the other two being the launching of the world's largest passenger plane, the Do-X, and the capture of the ocean speed blue ribbon by the new liner Bremen.

The Romar which flew yesterday will inaugurate the trans-atlantic service in October. No passengers will be carried.

Merkel said after the flight:

"This Romar will make the trial flight to South America within 10 weeks. She will fly by stages to Buenos Aires, via Southampton, the Cape Verdi Islands, Fernando Island off South America, and Rio de Fanerio."

'No Chance' of Visit to U. S. By MacDonald

Paris, July 27.—It is learned authoritatively in Paris that Premier Ramsay MacDonald of Britain will not visit Washington to talk disarmament with President Hoover this year.

A confidential source here quoted a member of the British Labor Cabinet as saying:

"There is no chance of MacDonald going to America in October or any other time this year. The British premier was forced to make the statement in the House of Commons that October would likely be the month for his trip, as a gesture in support of his foreign policy."

It was learned here that J. H. Thomas, Lord Privy Seal, will sail for Canada in two weeks, and that before his return he will probably visit Mr. Hoover as representative of the Premier, and will discuss naval armaments reduction with the American President.

HOOVER'S NAVY CURB BACKED BY WALSH

Bay State Senator Believes All U. S. Will Approve Halt in the Cruiser Building

Washington, July 27 (INS)—Direct discussions between Great Britain and the United States of an Anglo-American naval agreement will be resumed in London Monday, it was announced today. Hugh Gibson, ambassador to Belgium, will participate in the discussion with Ambassador Dawes and Premier MacDonald.

Washington, July 27—President Hoover today faces a bitter fight with Congress in the near future over the cruiser issue following the declaration of Senator Frederick Hale of Maine, chairman of Senate naval committee that the President was "entirely in error" in his stand.

While Sen. F. H. Gillett was reported at his Springfield, Mass., home to have endorsed Hoover's suspension of part of the new cruiser program, the President was upheld at the Capitol by Sen. David I. Walsh of Massachusetts.

A member of the committee on naval affairs, Sen. Walsh said that if any doubt exists as to the authority of President Hoover to suspend construction of cruisers, then a resolution defining this authority would be offered when Congress convenes. Such a resolution has already been prepared by Sen. King of Utah.

ENDORSES STAND

Sen. Walsh warmly endorsed President Hoover's course in suspending naval cruiser construction. He expressed the hope that it was more than a mere "gesture" and more than mere "suspension" of cruiser building, and that a naval agreement would eventuate which would limit and reduce naval armaments.

He declared that in his judgment both Congress and the country would strongly back the President in his decision to delay cruiser building pending the outcome of a new conference.

BROOKHART RAPS McNUTT

Today, commenting President Hoover's suspension of cruiser construction, Senator Brookhart, of Iowa, who opposed the cruiser bill, voiced a vigorous protest against views expressed by National Commander McNutt, of the American Legion, on the question.

Brookhart said McNutt "is only representing a little, bloodthirsty coterie at the head of the legion which has become principal propagandist for the war profiteers." The Iowan is a legion member.

He asserted that a "vast majority of the rank and file of the legion is against war and useless war preparations."

"The storm is true," he added, "of a still larger number of world war soldiers who are not members of the legion at all."

Boston V. F. W. Protest Delay

A telegram expressing the opposition of the Massachusetts Department, Veterans of Foreign Wars, to the suspension or delay in laying down keels of cruisers called for under existing legislation, was sent to President Hoover by Max Singer of Boston, commander of the V. F. W.

At the same time Singer made known tentative plans for the calling of a mass meeting of military organizations on Boston Common next Tuesday night.

of gasoline and breakfast was taken up to the fliers shortly after 7 a. m. and the engine and plane also climbed back up to a higher and cooler altitude to resume cruising above the airport. The sky was clear.

Good sportsmanship pervaded a brief message which fluttered down from the plane today a few moments after the pilots had been informed that their closest contemporaneous competitor, The Billion Dollar City plane, had been forced down at Houston, Texas.

"Sure sorry boys," the note read. "We were just enjoying the little race. We have 338 hours."

How a collision in midair, that would have terminated disastrously the plane's record-breaking flight, was narrowly averted was recounted today by the crew of a refueling ship.

Exhibiting bruises incurred when he was thrown violently against the side of the refueling plane, P. V. Chaffee told how the attempts of a photographer to obtain "close-ups" of the endurance monoplane of Dale Jackson and Forest O'Brine almost resulted in a crash in the clouds.

Chaffee and Maj. C. Ray Wassal in the refueling plane had just made a contact with the Robin for the transfer of gasoline when the cameraman's tri-motored Fokker descended dangerously near the supply ship.

"Wassal ducked and I was hurled against the side of the cockpit and bruised," said Chaffee.

The fliers' earnings today reached $9000.

Minneapolis Fliers in Air on Their 5th Day

Minneapolis, July 27 (AP)—With their first 100 hours behind them, Owen Haugland and Capt. P. L. Crichton of Minneapolis today were piloting the monoplane, the Minnesota, toward the end of their fifth day of endurance refueling flying.

The Minnesota, which went up from Wold Chamberlain field at 6:40 p. m. Monday, passed the 116-hour mark at 10 a. m. today.

Texas Plane Is Forced Down by a Mishap

Houston, July 27 (AP)—The endurance monoplane Billion Dollar City made a forced landing at the Houston airport at 6:30:06 a. m. today after being in the air 233 hours 1 minute and 12 seconds.

A scraping on the connecting rod of No. 1 cylinder or the 225-horsepower Wright whirlwind motor became loose, wrecking the cylinder and stopping the engine.

Joe Glass was at the controls and Glenn L. Loomis was asleep.

The breakdown occurred a few minutes after the plane, a Stinson-Detroit, had made its 29th refueling contact.

BIG HAUL IN BRAINTREE RAID

"Hell's Kitchen" Speakeasy Yields 1000 Bottles of Liquor

Following a spectacular midnight raid, more than a score of men and women patrons of a "Hell's Kitchen" speakeasy in Braintree were waiting nervously today for possible summonses to court.

The place was allegedly doing a thriving business when the officers arrived. The customers made a break for the doors but were met by plain clothes men who had surrounded the building. At least 1000 bottles of beer were seized, according to the police.

The establishment raided was a cottage on Granite st., South Braintree. The authorities maintain that it has achieved a reputation all up and down the South Shore.

In addition to the 1000 quarts of beer, said to have been discovered in the place, 700 quarts were also found. This stock was cached, it was alleged, in a woodshed under several cords of kindling and wooden packing boxes.

Two patrol wagon trips were made to transport the seized beverage to police headquarters. The raiding squad was headed by Chief of Police John J. Heaney. After the cottage had been surrounded, Patrolmen Annis and Sullivan forced an entrance through a window.

legacies of $162,000 and public bequests of $175,000 are subtracted.

Mrs. Walker, who was employed by Lufkin during his residence at the Back Bay hotel, claimed Lufkin had promised to make her his wife and filed intentions of their marriage at City Hall.

The inventor's sister immediately began court action which resulted in the appointment of Edward F. McConnell as Lufkin's guardian. One of McConnell's first acts was to dispense with Mrs. Walker's services and at his funeral last Wednesday the matronly nurse was understood to have been absent.

Catherine Haffie, an employe of the Back Bay hotel where Lufkin lived, is given $5000 in his will.

Bequests of $25,000 each are made to Thekla Cornehaus, E. Rebecca Walker, both of Boston; George R. Farnham of Melrose and Henry P. Tilden of East Weymouth.

The public bequests are: Boston Square and Compass Club, $5000; New England Home for Deaf and Dumb, Danvers, $15,000; Winchester Hospital, Winchester, School for the Blind, New York city; Home for Aged Couples at Roxbury, Morgan Memorial, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association and the Salvation Army, each $25,000.

The following persons are each given a legacy of $5000: Mary Copeland, Willis M. Copeland, Effie Copeland, Raymond Copeland, Edith Copeland and John L. Copeland, all of Hyde Park; Clara E. Gott, Edith Hyde, Edith Dougharty and John Donoharm, all of Lawrence Falls, Me.; Margaret Welsh, Bridget McCarn, Jerry Shea, Henry Nielsen, employes of the Home, Brunswick; Gertrude Crooks of Whitman, Winnie Knapp of Winchester.

Ethel Littlefield of Moncton, N. B., Hannah Ryan of Roslindale, Anthony Carbona of 38 Chardon st., Boston, and Emma J. Bristol of Attleboro, each are given $5000.

The rest and residue of Lufkin's estate is left to his sister, Thekla Graham, Henry P. Tilden and the United States Trust Co., to be divided among them in equal shares.

"My bequest to the United States Trust Company," the will says, "is in appreciation of the many services rendered by it to me."

The residuary legatees are appointed executors.

Wife Away, Tries to Cook, Home Burns

Rumford, Me., July 27—"Stay as long as you're needed, ma," Eugene Kidder, veteran merchant and race-horse owner of Smith's Crossing, told his wife when she left to attend a relative's funeral at Worcester, Mass. "Guess I'm old enough to take care of myself for a day or two."

Mrs. Kidder left—with some misgivings.

Today she was on her way home but home was only a mass of blackened ruins.

"Gene" Kidder started to cook his own dinner on a gasoline stove. He took a walk while the water boiled. The stove blew up, and the resulting fire did damage of $24,000, destroying the Kidder summer kitchen, the Kidder dwelling, a barn, a shed, and two automobiles.

SNOOK DREADS WOMEN'S VENGEANCE ON CO-ED DEATH JURY

ONLY MEN WILL WEIGH FATE OF SLAYER

Defense in the Dramatic Trial Weeds Out "Gentler Sex"; Young Girls Hear Fight

Columbus, O., July 27 (INS)—Dr. James H. Snook wants a "men's jury."

In his fight to escape the electric chair the slayer of Miss Thoora Hitz, the "bashful" university co-ed, is manifesting a marked tendency to gamble his fate with a jury composed wholly of men.

Snook's lawyers are slowly but surely ruling the women off the jury, apparently with the professor's approval. Too many of the women seem to have made up their minds as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

Monday, the seemingly monumental task of getting this jury will be resumed. There was no session of court today and Snook spent his time in jail instead of playing to a full house of young girls in the courtroom.

Eleven jurors, three of them women—a nurse and two housewives—have been tentatively accepted. The defense, however, still has nine peremptory challenges to exercise and seems inclined to use them. Repeatedly, when the jury box has been filled, the prosecution has announced, "we are satisfied with the jury as constituted." But the defense is not.

A new panel of 50 talesmen has been ordered to report Monday. The original venire of 75 talesmen is almost exhausted.

The trial evidently is not causing Snook to lose any sleep in his cell. The sheriff asked him this morning how he had slept last night and the prisoner replied: "Just fine. I've been resting well all along."

The three men under arrest are charged by police with the larceny of milk from the wreckage of the milk wagon. They are Stanley J. Grankewicz of Paul Gore st., Jamaica Plain; John W. McDonald of Pond st., Jamaica Plain and Charles P. McCarthy of Armory st., Jamaica Plain.

Charles Childs of School st., Milton, was the operator of the auto, police say.

WOMEN TO AID CIVIL WAR VET

Col. Walter P. Breckenridge, 89-year-old Confederate veteran, who collapsed in Harvard sq. after he completed a hitch-hike trip from Oakland, Cal., will not have to worry about his future welfare.

A representative of the Daughters of the Confederacy in Boston today notified authorities of Cambridge City Hospital where the veteran was sent, that the Daughters would call for him and see that he was well taken care of in the future. When asked how he felt today, Breckenridge said:

"I'm feeling as fresh as a Killarney rose. I'm ready to leave here any time now." When asked to explain his exceptional vigor, he answered: "I have smoked a pipe since I was eight, and was brought up on whiskey—pure whiskey, I mean."

Breckenridge served with the 18th Infantry of North Carolina in the Civil War. After the death of his wife 12 years ago, he went to Oakland to live. A desire to see friends in Chelsea impelled him, he said, to make the long trip East.

Voorhis, at 100, Just Tried to Earn Living'

New York, July 27 (AP)—At the end of his first century of living John R. Voorhis, grand sachem of Tammany, today planned to maintain the regular routine of his duties as commissioner of elections. He disclaimed any achievement in his longevity.

"I did not set out aiming to be 100 or any other age," he said at a celebration in his honor. "All I set out to do was earn a living, put aside a little of it for savings if possible, to mind my own business and do my duty as it came along."

During a boat trip around Manhattan Island, where he was born in the year of Andrew Jackson's inauguration, he was asked if he was not amazed by the changes in the city since his youth. "No," he replied, "the changes have all come in such sequence that I have hardly noticed them."

Today, Mr. Voorhis was at his desk at 9:30 a. m., as usual, half an hour before the birthday party which had been a custom in the bureau of elections office for the past decade.

Instead of being obscured by 100 candles, the birthday cake had a single candle for the century. Speeches were made by Mayor James J. Walker and former Gov. Alfred E. Smith.

A radio speech was made by the centenarian himself.

ACQUIT STINNES IN BOND FRAUD

Berlin, July 27 (AP)—Hugo Stinnes, Jr., son of the German post war industrial magnate, was declared not guilty today of attempting to defraud the German government in operations with German war loan bonds.

His secretary, Wolf von Waldow, was sentenced to four months in prison, of which seven weeks were allowed for his incarceration during the seven weeks' trial. He was released for the rest of his term on good behavior. Bela Groos was sentenced to four months.

Eugene Hirsch of Paris, described as a "business man," was fined $750. Erich Nothmann of Hamburg, Joseph Schneid and Leo Hirsch, other "business men," were acquitted.

Stinnes was charged with an attempt to defraud the treasury of about $480,000. His defense was he was left by his secretary, Von Waldow, in ignorance of the bond transactions.

$4,000,000,000 BUDGET LOOMS

Washington, July 26 (AP)—The tremendous task of formulating estimates of the Government's $4,000,000,000 budget for the 1931 fiscal year has begun.

As departmental expenditures have been increasing in recent years—almost at the annual rate of $100,000,000—budget experts face a difficult task for the 1931 budget in keeping the total below the $4,000,000,000 mark desired by President Hoover. Last year's budget aggregated $3,800,000,000, but new activities of the Government voted by Congress have added large expenditures.

Chief among these are farm relief and Government building programs, cruiser and military aircraft programs, Mississippi flood control and Boulder Dam, increases in postal deficits and the undertakings entrusted to the law enforcement and other commissions.

106 ABOVE IN NORTH DAKOTA

Chicago, July 27 (AP)—The Northwest, no stranger to biting winter winds, zero gales and heavy snows, steamed today under unusually torrid temperatures.

A score of communities in the Dakotas and the Minnesotas yesterday had temperature readings of more than 100 degrees. Bismarck, N. D., was the hottest, with 106, while Aberdeen, S. D., reported 105.

The heat wave, however, was not localized in the Northwest, but was general over most of middle America. One death attributed to heat occurred at Superior, Wis.

The blazing sun, abetted by hot winds, also was making difficult the fight of several hundred men against forest fires in Minnesota.

Tax Refund Cases Are Diminishing

Washington, July 27—Hope that settlement of cases originating before 1922 would bring a sharp decrease in the annual appropriations necessary for tax refunds was held out in a joint congressional committee on internal revenue taxation.

Pointing to an average rate of settlement of $18,224,270 a month for the seven months between June 7 and Dec. 31, 1928, the committee said that 42 per cent of these refunds was due to provisions of law which have not been applicable since 1922. Tax refund claims totaling $1,000,000,000 still are on file with the bureau of internal revenue.

EQUITY RIOT AT HOLLYWOOD

Los Angeles, Cal., July 27 (AP)—A physical encounter at a Hollywood film studio between employes and alleged sympathizers with the Actors' Equity Association here marked the first violence incidental to Equity's campaign for a closed shop in the talkie studios.

Two men were dragged from an automobile and several hundred feet of film destroyed by war vets working in a picture at a studio when alleged sympathizers with Equity created a demonstration by booing and hissing 150 former service men as they were leaving the lot.

Charles Adams, head of the motion picture division of the central employment bureau for veterans, who had engaged the ex-service men, was in the studio when the demonstration occurred. He said two of three men who hissed the workers were taken from their machine, while the third, a man of advanced age, was unmolested.

When he obtained the names of the three men, they admitted, he said, that they were members of Actors' Equity Association. The former service men took a camera which they said the trio had used to film their departure from the studio and destroyed the film in it.

Bremen Hopes to Cut Time 3 Hrs., 49 Min.

New York, July 27 (AP)—Carrying a capacity booking of 2200 passengers, the liner Bremen, new speed queen of the seas, left her Brooklyn pier early today for Cherbourg, in quest of further transatlantic laurels.

Before she left, Capt. Leopold Ziegenbein said he was confident the ship would reach Cherbourg at 6 a. m. next Thursday, making the voyage in 5 hours 49 minutes less than the eastward record, held by the Cunarder Mauretania.

The Mauretania's record for the voyage from Ambrose lightship to Cherbourg, set in 1924, is 5 days 1 hour 49 minutes. Capt. Ziegenbein's forecast would make the Bremen's time 4 days 22 hours. The Bremen cleared Ambrose lightship at 2:15 a. m. (Eastern standard time).

Marine engineers said that the most remarkable part of the Bremen's westward trip, which shattered all transatlantic speed records, was the speed attained by the new single reduction turbines, with which the ship is powered. It was said that if she could average nearly 29 knots on her maiden trip, she would do more than 30 knots after a few more crossings.

RECORD BANK DEPOSITS ARE BEING MADE

Flow of Money Into Savings Institutions Reflects the Nation's Prosperity

Washington, July 27 (INS)—Thrifty and prosperous Americans are continuing to pour deposits into the nation's banks at a record rate, with the result that a federal reserve board announcement today disclosed that member banks in 101 leading cities of the nation gained $49,000,000 in net demand deposits in the week ending July 17.

The same situation is said to obtain in most of the state banking systems, particularly in savings banks. The condition is interpreted by government officials as the natural result of the fast moving industrial machine of the country, which is establishing new records in both foreign and domestic trade in many lines.

Bank failures in Florida, New Jersey and New York are regarded by Treasury officials as the result of purely local conditions or mismanagement, which have no relation to the vast banking system of the country as a whole.

While federal officials have declined to comment upon recent bank failures, they generally regard them as insignificant when considered as a part of the entire banking picture.

STOCKHOLDERS CALLED IN BANK CASE

Conference to Decide Fate of the New Milford Security Company

New Milford, Ct., July 27 (AP)—Tangled accounts, which in a partial audit have shown an alleged shortage of funds running into tens of thousands of dollars, led Powell G. Seeley, newly chosen manager of the New Milford Security Company, today to call a meeting of creditors, stockholders and directors of the institution for next Thursday to determine its future.

This audit was begun immediately after the sudden death on July 16 of Edwin Justin Emmons, who had been manager of the security company for 12 years, and had also been treasurer of a savings bank and a director in a national bank here.

The meeting has been called to decide whether the company shall be continued by stockholders making up any impairment shown by the audit, or going into a receivership.

He was of the opinion that months would be required to determine the condition of the company and of its trust and other funds, but Mr. Seeley expected to have a statement as to approximate assets and liabilities ready for next week's meeting.

Residents of New Milford have liberally used the security company for their banking house, placing with it money for investment so that it is estimated that most of the loss will fall on these customers. Some 53 residents had an aggregate of $50,000 in the company and 40 others had deposited a total of about $100,000 for investment.

Much of the loss is due to "frozen" assets in the form of mortgages on Western lands. There was a loan of about $100,000 without security to another company, of which Emmons was treasurer. Mr. Seeley said that collection of the loan did not seem likely.

RUM LOCK FAILS TO CLOSE P. O.

Lowell, July 27 (AP)—A sub-station of the Lowell postoffice was open illegally here today as a result of a temporary injunction obtained by Dists. Attorney Robert T. Bushnell in a preliminary action to padlock proceedings in several Middlesex county courts.

A temporary injunction recently issued by Judge Alonzo Wood restrained the occupants of the building in which the sub-station is located from removing any property from the structure. When Assistant District Attorney Crafts was informed of the injunction applied to a building which housed a postoffice station and that the alleged liquor nuisance was on the third floor, he petitioned for an amendment which would make the injunction applicable only to the third floor. The petition will be heard in Boston Tuesday.

Two hundred and fifty riding horses, owned by Brooklyn society people and valued at $125,000, were led from the burning stables to safety by passersby. The fire was started by a cigarette dropped by a patron of one of the night clubs. No one was injured.

OFFERS SELF TO HIGHEST BIDDER

Beauty, 18, Will Wed Any Man for Funds to Cure Crippled Sister

Union City, N. J., July 27 (INS)—Placing herself on an auction block because of her love for a crippled sister, Janet Walker, strikingly beautiful eighteen-year-old girl, today offered herself to the highest bidder as "bride, wife and devoted mother."

Behind a prosaic advertisement to this effect appearing in a local paper here, is an affecting story of sisterly love and sacrifice rarely heard in this day and age.

Up in Norwich, Ct., Janet has left the only heart-treasure her brief life has known—Her fourteen-year-old sister, paralyzed in the right side, half-walking, half-stumbling through life. Their mother died five years ago. Besides Doris, a step-mother has on her hands the care of a four-year-old stepbrother and a ten months' old baby girl.

The father is a farmer, and according to Janet, scarcely able to support his little brood. Janet came to New York some months ago, took a job as a telephone operator, and living in a humble tenement atop the Jersey palisades, conscientiously sent home part of her hard-earned income each week to ease the life of her crippled sister.

"Doctors have told me that my little sister can be cured," Janet said. "But it will take money—more than I can ever earn.

"I am lonely for my sister, and lonely for companionship. I will live anywhere and be a good wife. It doesn't matter how old the man who marries me may be, provided he is kind and will help to cure my little sister."

There were 25 passengers aboard during the test flight.

"Send them by express, then," said the judge.

LICENSE RULE AFFECTS ALL

The license of any person deemed to have been drinking while operating an automobile will be revoked, regardless of whether the drinking is done in line of duty or otherwise.

The above statement was issued by Capt. George A. Parker, registrar of motor vehicles, in connection with an alleged admission by Marcus F. Jacobson of Cambridge, a Watch and Ward Society investigator and government witness at the trials of Fred R. Locke and John E. Fielding at Brockton, that he drove a motor car after drinking two glasses of beer and a 50-cent glass of whiskey, following a raid made by him and another agent in a Halifax beach club.

A stenographic copy of his testimony will be in the hands of Capt. Parker within a day or two for consideration and action.

When Capt. Parker's ruling was called to the attention of Maj. Henry I. Goodnough, director of prohibition enforcement in New England he declared that "a prohibition agent out for boys or sales in the line of duty never goes alone and that the man who operates the automobile, when one is used does that job and none other."

Cook of Trawler Sure Gets His Swordfish

Gather around, mates; here's a fish story with a wallop.

It has nothing to do with fresh water minnows or "giant" trout weighing half a pound but with huge swordfish weighing from 150 to 400 pounds and how they were captured by a cook who would a harpooner be.

The trawler Blanche Ring, owned by Busalacchi Brothers, arrived in Boston today with 50 of these large fish which were caught in four hours with improvised apparatus. Fishermen who know their angle worms will realize that a trawler is not fitted to capture swordfish.

When the Blanche Ring ran into a large school of swordfish off Georges banks a council of war was called by the crew. High prices in the Boston market were tempting.

From bits of hollow brass pipe harpoons, five inches long, were fashioned. They were attached to pieces of wood six feet long, made from wooden boards used as pens on the trawler to separate haddock and other groundfish while being dressed. Rope was attached to the hand-made handles.

A seat was rigged up on a boom on the bow of the trawler and then Adolph Spinney, cook extraordinary, took his place. Although he had no previous experience as a "striker," Adolph proved himself an adept. What he did to those swordfish will be re-told on the Georges banks 100 years hence.

As the trawler quietly steamed toward the giant fish Adolph raised his mighty right, and with the aim of "Sure Shot Harry" hit his quarry with such force that they soon gave up the ghost. He kept other members of the crew chasing the wounded fish. When Adolph has his next coat of arms made it will contain the picture of a harpoon on a field rampant.

PROBE LIQUOR SMUGGLING AT DEER ISLAND

Investigation of a plot to smuggle liquor to inmates of Deer Island House of Correction was revealed today with the resignation of Arthur L. McLaughlin of Allston st., Charlestown, as an officer on the island.

McLaughlin was suspended by Master George F. A. Mulcahy after it is alleged that he was caught bringing a quantity of moonshine to the island when returning from leave.

The seizure of the liquor, following closely upon the heels of the discovery of four inmates with liquor on their breaths and the further discovery of an empty pint bottle in the cell of one, has created a stir on the island.

FOUR IN SOLITARY

The four men were placed in solitary confinement and secret investigations were started by Penal Commissioner Philip A. Chapman and by Master Mulcahy.

A staff of special investigators were employed to discover the source of the inmates' liquor supply. A former inmate befriended by Chapman came to him Thursday night with a story that liquor was being brought to the island by McLaughlin.

The former inmate told the commissioner that it would be well to watch McLaughlin last night, as he was going to bring liquor in.

Chapman told Mulcahy, who ordered a search of all officers coming to the island on Friday.

Asst. Master Robert Mackie was placed in charge of the investigation. When McLaughlin reported Shirley Gut at 3.30 to work the 4 to 12 shift he was greeted by Mackie.

GUARD HAD LIQUOR

A search revealed that he had a pint of moonshine in his bag, Mulcahy charged.

He said that he intended to bring it home when relieved from duty. Master Mulcahy immediately suspended him and today McLaughlin handed his resignation in to Commissioner Chapman.

McLaughlin has been an officer on the island since Jan. 11, 1928. Further prosecution may follow.

Commenting today on the case, Commissioner Chapman said: "It is regrettable that such an incident occurred, especially when only recently the inmates of the House of Correction proved their loyalty to the institution and their heroism at the recent disastrous fire.

"It is most unfortunate that a duly sworn officer of the law should so far forget his oath of office to stoop to such a despicable act. The record at Deer Island has been most excellent for the past 16 months."

Weymouth Dog Cream 'Thief' Reforms

"A small, white dog belonging to the Dowd family of 14 Keith st., Weymouth is believed by Weymouth police to be the "thief" that has been making the rounds of Weymouth back doors and lapping up the cream from the tops of milk bottles. His name is "Dempsey," and his owner has been warned to keep a closer watch on him.

"Dempsey" himself was interviewed by a Boston Evening American reporter.

"You may quote me in the press," said "Dempsey," "as saying that I am not a thief. I have never stolen anything in my life."

"Dempsey's" stringy white hair began to straighten, as if he was angry at being described as a thief. He glared at the reporter.

"But did you go about in the early hours of the morning, pulling the caps from milk bottles and lapping off the cream? demanded the reporter.

"For the sake of argument," answered "Dempsey," "suppose that I did. What of it?"

"What of it! What of it! Do you thing it a trivial matter to steal the cream meant for the coffee of some husband who is none too agreeable when arising at 6 a. m.? Did you ever hear a half sleepy and fully grouchy husband bawl out his wife in the early morning because there was no cream for the coffee?"

Dempsey turned his head away.

"Just think," the reporter continued, "Suppose that cream you are alleged to have stolen was intended for some invalid. Suppose it was meant for a little baby. How would you like it if someone came around and dug up your choicest bones, and left you go hungry?"

"Stop!" cried Dempsey. "You're breaking my heart. Honest, mister, I won't do it again, even if I never have done it. Please go away. I'll go on the water wagon this minute."

Dempsey turned with tear filled eyes, and walked sorrowfully to his house. And the reporter beamed on all the world, for he felt that he had brought one sinner back to the path of virtue, had reformed one drinker.

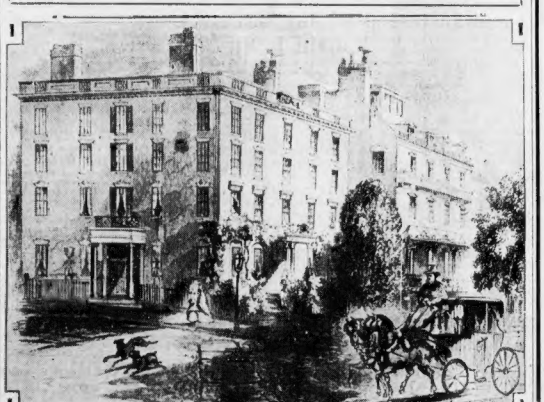
Old Boston In Pictures—No. 15



THE 15th picture in the Boston Evening American's series of scenes of Boston of bygone days again recalls another setting on Beacon Hill which lent that section its unique charm. Depicted here is the "Club House," at Beacon and Park sts. on the site that now faces the statue of Gen. Hooker on the State House grounds. The building was owned by the Hon. Abbot Lawrence and occupied by him from October, 1836, until his death in 1855. In 1863, trustees of the estate leased the building to the newly founded Union Club, which organization became its owner some five years later. With the removal of the club, the building finally gave way to trade. Interesting pictures of Old Boston may be submitted to the Picture Editor, Boston Evening American.

THREATENS BIG ALIEN RING EXPOSE

A complete expose of alleged organized exploitation of aliens seeking naturalization in Boston looms today as a result of the announced intention of Wilfred E. Janson, senior naturalization examiner, to fight a Washington decree transferring him to New York.

Rumblings of discord in the naturalization office have been growing in intensity since a secret investigation of the department was conducted three months ago.

Although the findings of the official probers were never made public, airing was accorded charges that foreign-born residents of Boston had been misled and victimized by a ring who peddled citizenship papers at high prices.

Political influence was reported to have backed the "ring" in its commercialization of the courts and the naturalization office.

So flagrant were the abuses allegedly perpetrated at one time that it was said to have cost uninformed aliens large fees merely to have it "arranged" for their citizenship petitions to be filed with the court.

The "ring" was claimed to have runners continually drumming up new trade with non-English speaking men and women who coveted the right to call themselves Americans.

In many instances, according to unofficial investigators, aliens who were entitled to citizenship privilege at purely nominal cost, paid sums mounting into the hundreds of dollars to "agents," who did nothing for their hoodwinked clients but lead them through a labyrinth of mythical red tape.

Examiner Janson, through counsel, maintains that he has been the "goat" for abuses for which neither he nor the naturalization office could rightfully be held responsible.

His attorney, J. Frank Hughes of Boston, today forwarded to Washington a formal demand for a statement of the reasons behind the announcement of the transfer.

"We will fight this thing to a finish," said Atty. Hughes, "even if it is necessary to get a congressional investigation to do it."

Mrs. Tumilty appealed to the police to raid her home because of the alleged failure of her husband to support her and her seven children.

Several times during the last few months police from the Roxbury Crossing station had visited the house on the pleas of Mrs. Tumilty, but were unable to find any liquor.

After her unsuccessful appeals to the police of the Roxbury Crossing station, Mrs. Tumilty appealed to Superintendent Crowley to have officers of the liquor squad raid her home.

When they arrived they found Mrs. Tumilty there caring for her children. With an infant in her arms she went about the rooms offering the police what assistance she could, but she told them she didn't know exactly where the liquor was hidden. They found the caches after a long search.

DEMOCRATS TO MEET ON LOSS OF NAMES

Stirred by the elimination of 5112 names of men and women from the voting list by the Cambridge election commission and anxious to determine the cause, officers of the Democratic city committee will meet Wednesday evening to take action, it was announced by Chairman Edward F. Sennott today.

Dropping of the names has caused widespread discussion in political circles, so much so that there was talk of an investigation by the City Council, which recently passed an order calling for the publication of the names so that interested parties may know who the latter are.

Officials of the Republican city committee and the Non-Partisan League of Voters are said to be conducting a quiet investigation of the dropping of so many names, many of whom are said to be prominent in city affairs.

A poll of the city was made by the police the week of April 1. Officers engaged in the work were paid extra. Stringent instructions were given the men to be sure and determine definitely who of assessable age lived in each house. Further instructions were given concerning occupants of houses run by social service organizations.

As fast as the officers turned in the names to their division commander, a record was made before turning them over to the election commission. The names were later tabulated by clerks in the election commission's office, following which all names not on the police list were dropped, it is stated.

This data is available for the officers of the Democratic city committee and may lead to the latter body taking advantage of it to reach a conclusion as to where to place the blame, it is averred. The findings of the committee may result in a motion for a recanvass of the voting lists by members of the ward and city committee of the party with a view to getting them back on the voting list.

The call for the meeting states that it is for officers only and that, aside from the registration matter, plans will be considered for a public demonstration by the Democratic committee, in the form of an indoor or outdoor gathering, at which two baby pigs will be given away.

Boston Fur Advertising Commended

"The straightforward stand taken by the Boston furriers in their relationship with the public is most commendable, and might well serve as an example for fur retailers in every town and city in the United States. The Boston fur men believe, and rightly so, that a popular knowledge of furs will be helpful to the public and the fur industry." (Quotation from prominent fur trade magazine in 1928.)

Furs are advertised by their real name in Boston. Most Boston furriers want you to know what you are buying and what service you may expect from your purchase. They co-operate with the Boston Better Business Bureau in maintaining high standards, recognized and looked up to nationally. Report any unfair dealing to the Bureau.

LLOYD GEORGE IN FIGHT ON YOUNG PLAN

London, July 27 (AP)—Echoing comment, some approving and some unfavorable, was heard today to a final splurge of debate on the Young reparations plan in the House of Commons prior to parliament's rising for the summer recess.

David Lloyd George, Liberal leader, said he hoped the Labor Chancellor of the Exchequer, Philip Snowden, would use his influence to obtain substantial modification of the plan before it was approved by parliament. His objection was not that it reduced German payments, but that practically the whole of the sacrifices were made at Great Britain's expense.

Lloyd George said that while practically nothing would come to Great Britain from the unconditional German annuities Britain still would be obliged "to pay our £34,000,000 to America. The £23,000,000 paid to France had the best security in the world, but we had none. Our payments would be precarious and would ultimately vanish because Germany has been able only to pay by borrowing on a large scale and keeping down wages. That could not continue indefinitely."

Chancellor Snowden reiterated that Great Britain in the forthcoming conference would do her best to get modifications if possible in the British interest. He agreed that the Young report constituted a demand for fresh sacrifices from Britain, but that the limit of British concessions had been reached.

He emphasized that Great Britain was not committed to acceptance of the Young plan.

SHOE TURNERS REJECT PEACE

Haverhill, July 27—A test vote on a compromise agreement to end the seven weeks' strike of 6300 shoe workers was being taken today, with every indication that the union workmen would reject the proposal.

Local 2, turn workmen, rejected the "dummy" agreement last night by a vote of 183 to 10. The members of the six other locals of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union were expected to turn it down at the polls today.

The proposal before the voters is similar to one submitted by the manufacturers and turned down some time ago. Local 10, woodheelers, undertook to reopen peace negotiations by recording a test sentiment vote on a proposed three-year contract at present wage scale and a 48-hour week except during the three summer months when working time would be reduced to 45 hours.

The stitchers' local, comprising 3000 members and the largest in the industry here, was the last in the voting today after an overnight change of mind.

MOODY GRANTS DYING PLEA

Word has been received that the dying request of Carl B. Cowan, the young man who made arrangements with an undertaker here in the knowledge that he was going to die, has been granted by Governor Dan Moody of Texas, in that Cowan's brother, T. M. Cowan, is being paroled from the Texas state penitentiary to attend his funeral.

Cowan died at the City Hospital of an incurable disease. He went there on Friday, July 19. The first three days he spent in writing letters. On the fourth day, July 23, he died.

One of the letters was to Governor Moody. Another was to F. J. Crosby, Roxbury funeral director, asking that his body be shipped to his home in Altus, Okla. Other letters were to relatives and friends.

Cowan's body was shipped West Wednesday. It should arrive in Altus today. The brother, T. M. Cowan, who is serving three years in the Texas prison for theft, is reported on his way to the funeral.

In his letter to Governor Moody, just before he died, Cowan said that he believed his brother's attendance at his funeral would do more to help him "go straight" than anything else.

ANOTHER MANHATTAN-HUB ALLIANCE IS ANNOUNCED today in the engagement of Miss Pauline Pope Day, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Day, of Grammercy Park, New York, and Short Hills, N. J., to Arthur E. French of Winchester. An early fall wedding will be solemnized at the beautiful country estate of the Days. Miss Day has a large circle of friends in Boston, where she was educated in private schools and at the Boston Art School. She was presented at the Court of St. James on May 25, 1927. The bride-elect's mother, Mrs. Day, is the granddaughter of the late James Monroe Taylor, one of the first settlers of Grammercy Park, whose nephew and namesake was president of Vassar College for 25 years.

BOSTON SOCIETY IS SOON to receive a snower of September wedding invitations from the large coterie of engaged girls who prefer fall nuptials. One of the important wedding dates will be September 10, chosen by Miss Julia Paine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Paine of Weston, for her wedding with George Kennard Wakefield. Miss Paine is the granddaughter of the late Gen. Charles J. Paine and a popular member of the Junior League and the Vincent Club.

MRS. VANDERBILT CHURCH, famous both for her devotion to charities and to her horses, combines the two in a unique entertainment to be staged in the paddock of her Dudley Place stables at Middleton, R. I., tomorrow afternoon. On this occasion mind-reading ponies will feature the program of many novelties and a musical interlude. The coach and four, which Mrs. Church delights in driving about the countryside, will be on display. An inspection of the estate with its extensive stables, gardens and training grounds is included in the entertainment which is given in aid of the Rockney Farm Camp for Crippled Children.

SPEAKING OF HORSES REMINDS me that the devotees of equine sport have gone in for a national magazine dedicated to the horse and written by the coterie that stages the spring horse shows. The Horse Lover made its debut on society's breakfast table today, arrayed in a yellow and gray jacket and brimming over with news of interesting things about horses. Newell Bent's book, American Pole, to be offered by its publishers about August 15, is reviewed by the author, Henry G. Vaughan. M. F. H., Norfolk Hunt Club; John Macomber and Augustus F. Goodwin, president of the Eastern Horse Club, are among the contributors to this interesting newcomer.

UNDER A WIDE RED straw hat and presiding at the tea urn in the Manchester Yacht Clubhouse yesterday, I saw Miss Agnes Boardman, looking more charming than ever in blush silk frock and well tanned complexion. Miss Louise Fraenden watched the annual water frolic of society's younger members from the piazza, in a canary yellow dress and white coat. Among the debs who participated in the events were Misses Anne Blake, Katharine Richardson, Eleanor Shaw, Emily Dick, Lee and Marian McKean, Gordon Abbott directed the affair.

AMONG THAT GROUP OF society intent upon summering quietly in the White Mountains one finds Mrs. John Ames of Easton at Chocorua Inn and Mrs. William James of Cambridge, in retirement with her family, following the demise of her father, the late John Sumner Runnels. Arriving at Picketts on Sugar Hill yesterday were Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Bradlee of Chestnut Hill. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Morton and Miss Helen Morton of Weston are at the Waumsek at Jefferson, N. H. Trafford of Milton arrives from abroad today on the Holland-America line flagship Staatendam, from Rotterdam.

Federal Building Given to Wreckers

The old granite "fort," which is the nickname the occupants gave the Federal Building, has been placed in the hands of the wreckers. Seventy thousand tons of granite and 10,000 tons of steel will have to be removed before the builders can start erecting the new structure on the site.

D. C. Price, superintendent of the Newman Wrecking Co. of Cleveland, O., which has the contract for tearing down the building, stated that he believed it would take at least five months to wreck the building.

Detroit Club Leader Warns "Joiners"

The joining of clubs by women is slowly but surely becoming a habit which in the near future will call for concentrated combat, in the opinion of Mrs. Carl B. Chamberlain, president of the Detroit, Mich., Federation of Women's Clubs.

Her belief that more selective joining of clubs should be urged upon the organized womanhood of the country has been favorably greeted by the General Federation.

She says:

"The individual clubwoman can do much toward solving the problem by refusing to join 'needless organizations.' A small town that I visited boasts of three clubs yet the entire population is but 2000 people. This seems to be the ratio in larger cities, until each day brings forth another group of from 15 to 25 women meeting and keeping the good that they could just as easily add to a club that has been organized and is doing effective work along the same line of endeavor.

"Women are becoming a great power in these United States and now that we are being recognized for our ability why not concentrate our efforts so that we will not be spread out so thin that we will run the risk of losing the very ideals that we have striven for in the days when women's clubs were a 'thing apart.'

"Let us not strive to become professional 'joiners' but select a very few subjects and become as near perfect in them as it is humanly possible, leaving time enough to enjoy the great privilege of the American home with its ideal of good womanhood."

Mrs. Chamberlain further believes that the joining of several organizations with no definite object in view, except that of being away from one's home every day of the week, is one of the most destructive forces that women's clubs will have to combat as the years go on.

VERMONT FEDERATION

The child welfare program of the Vermont Federation of Women's Clubs for next year is to center about the passage of a bill, during the next legislative session, requiring court records of all transfers of permanent custody of children. Thus the protection of them from improper guardians will be assured. They also propose to stress the necessity for physical examinations of school children and the immunization from diphtheria by use of Schick test and follow-up treatments.

RAID JAILS MISS PENNYPACKER

Philadelphia, July 27 (AP)—Forty-five of the 55 persons arrested when police raided an alleged radical meeting in Grand Fraternity Hall spent the night in police station cells. The others were released on copies of the charge.

Among the prisoners, many of whom were women, was Miss Anna Pennypacker, daughter of the late Governor Samuel W. Pennypacker of Pennsylvania. Miss Pennypacker was offered her release on a copy of the charge, but declined to accept unless all the others were given their freedom. They were released early today.

The prisoners were charged with holding a meeting without a permit and some of them with disorderly conduct and distributing seditious literature.

The meeting was called by the Workers' International Relief to devise ways and means of helping a group of textile workers in Gastonia, N. C., who are charged with the killing of a policeman during labor disturbances.

HOPES TO BRING SCHNEIDER CUP TO U. S.

By FULTON LEWIS
Universal Service.

Washington, July 27—America's hopes for recovering the famous Schneider Cup, international speed trophy for seaplanes, are aroused with the disclosure of details of Lieut. Al Williams' veritable "flying bullet," long held secret.

Williams, speed ace of the navy's air service, personally secured the financing of his 1929 entry—radical in design and little more than a gigantic motor plant with fins slung to it.

Preliminary floating tests at the naval air factory in Philadelphia, where it is being built, have proved successful. All that now remains is an actual flying test before formal entry is made in the international classic to be held at Cowes, England, Sept. 6 and 7.

Although rumors have repeatedly told of a new British seaplane capable of 400 miles an hour, it is believed that the Williams entry will be able to eclipse even this mark.

"FLYING MOTOR"

The new American entry is, in fact, a literal "flying motor." It is so large that it takes up three-fourths of the length of the fuselage. The engine has 24 cylinders, and can best be described as being two V-type 12 cylinder engines placed bottom to bottom, thus forming an X.

On the front of it is mounted a planetary step-up gear for the propeller, so that the axis of the propeller is on the same line as the axis of the crankshaft, but turns at greatly increased speed. Special roller bearings for the propeller shaft have been necessary to accommodate the terrific speed.

OF MONOPLANE TYPE

As to the craft itself, it is of monoplane type with very small, very thin wings. It is paint.d solid black, and the cockpit in which Lieut. Williams will control the plane is so small that he will virtually have to be fitted into it. So long is the motor, that the pilot's seat is almost at the tail of the plane.

The rudder gear presents a radical departure from past models, being shaped like the tail of a shark.

The motor is water-cooled, and instead of having the usual radiator the wings are surfaced with "skin coolers" or very thin metal compartments through which the water passes for cooling. This uses the actual lifting resistance of the wings for cooling purposes and obviates the dead drag of the usual cooling apparatus.

The United States had no entry in the last Schneider Cup race in Venice, in 1927, and that year the prize was won by Lieut. S. N. Webster of the British Flying Corps with an average speed of 281 miles an hour.

Claim Russia on Way to True Democracy

Star Island, N. H., July 27—"Russia has not yet had full opportunity to make her contribution to the world," declared Rev. George Huntston Williams of Exeter today in an address on "Russia, Religion and Democracy," at the final day of the Unitarian Women's General Alliance week.

"Her civilization previous to the World War had been only superficially touched by that of Europe," he continued. "Now that the new Russian Democracy is uniting toward a world stride, she is compelled to form habits of international living."

Upshaw, Radical Dry, a N. Y. 'Reporter'

New York, July 26—A onetime congressman, with eight years of Washington service, prominent as an evangelist, today became a New York tabloid newspaper reporter.

Armed only with a pen and his crutches, William "Dry" Upshaw of Atlanta, who has buried thousands of words in the general direction of liquor and the devil, marched right into the very stronghold of the wet and wicked to work on a paper whose editorial policies are vastly different from his own beliefs.

"How did I get this job?" he repeated when interviewed, "I just sauntered in and asked the city editor if he'd hire me. Guess he thought I was crazy for a minute but he soon saw I was serious.

"What do they pay me? I don't know. Never mentioned that. Guess it'll be about like all other novices. But it's worth it."

Airmen Honor Bleriot, First to Fly Channel

Paris, July 27 (INS)—Across the path blazed by Louis Bleriot 20 years ago with a "rickety winged soap box," swarms of swift English aircraft came today to take part in a two-day air meet, held to commemorate the Frenchman's feat of being the first person to fly over the English channel.

It was hailed throughout the world as a deed of tremendous skill and mighty daring when Bleriot made his 30-minute flight over the English channel on July 25, 1909. Today swarms of commercial airplanes, carrying passengers and baggage, fly back and forth across the channel by day and night with the regularity of express trains or ocean liners.

The celebration in honor of Bleriot's feat began several days ago and will terminate tomorrow. Air officials gathered in Paris from all parts of the world to participate. The United States is represented by Major Barton K. Yount, attache for air at the American embassy.

Among the first persons to congratulate Bleriot was Col. Clifford Harmon of New York, who accomplished the first flight across Long Island sound almost simultaneously with Bleriot's channel trip.

After the ceremonies Bleriot took off for Calais, whence he will hop off for England later, duplicating his feat that astounded the world 20 years ago.

Unlike in 1909, when he was handling a primitive steering gear in a slow and clumsy airplane, the aeronautical pioneer today was in the passenger seat of one of the most modern air liners behind a noted pilot.

SUGAR TARIFF ROW WORRIES G.O.P. SENATORS

Washington, July 27 (INS)—With a bitter legislative war in the offing, the controversy over increasing import duties on sugar was thrown wide open today by the decision of the Senate finance committee to hold further hearings on this highly controversial tariff issue.

The "housewife rebellion" against the House rate of $2.40 per hundred pounds on Cuban sugar—as against the $1.76 in existing law—has been used to such advantage by Democratic leaders that administration spokesmen have become acutely worried over the possible effect of this single schedule in their thousand-itemed bill. As a result, Republican members of the committee in all probability will reject the House rate and approve a "sliding scale" of sugar duties, intended to put sugar in the American kitchen at from 3½ to 6 cents a pound.

The sliding scale, guarded carefully thus far, has been prepared by Sen. Reed Smoot (R) of Utah, chairman of the committee, after a number of conferences with President Hoover. It will be presented to the Republican members of the committee next week when the sugar schedule is reached. Once the scale is made public, importers, refiners and sugar-producers will be invited to discuss it publicly at another public session of the committee.

The concern of Republican leaders over the political effect of an increase in sugar tariffs was evidenced by their decision to hold additional hearings. The question of raising this tariff was debated for a week when the schedule was considered by a sub-committee. Despite those hearings, the committee decided to get further public reaction after the Smoot scale is published.

New Nungesser-Coli 'Clue' Believed Hoax

Genoa, July 27 (INS)—Another "message from the sea" clue to Nungesser and Coli, French fliers lost on a transatlantic attempt, was washed up here today by a storm. A note written in French in a bottle said the fliers had been located at 45 degrees north altitude, 65 west longitude, and asked that authorities be notified. Although regarded as another hoax, the bottle will be sent to Paris for examination.

THREE MORE LUCKY BILLS CASHED IN

By WON LUCKY BILL

Still they come—those keen sighted folks who are cashing in on their good luck in finding those valuable old lucky dollar bills for me. Three more cashed in yesterday. Two of them were mailed in from Lawrence.

There are, however, lots of other loose old $1 lucky bills yet uncovered. Get after 'em. See today's list in another column.

MAYOR MICHAEL A. LANDERS of Lawrence sends us Lucky buck A50457815B, explaining that the wife and daughter are at Salisbury Beach and that as the result of his "eating out" at a cafe he came into possession of the lucky one-spot. Well, Mayor, there's a check for $5 in the meal. You can have three or four free meals on us.

LOUIS A. KANE, 428 Riverside dr., another Lawrence resident, sends in lucky buck N41385233D. But he doesn't tell us how he got it or where. But we don't care just so long as we get these lucky bucks back into our jeans again. There's another $5 check on its way to you "Louie."

PHILIP F. MARSTUS, 108 Florida st., Dorchester, hied himself to the Boston American office yesterday with lucky buck V66458341D. One of his customers on his laundry route paid the laundry bill with this lucky buck. Some family could have a couple of free weekly washings done with the $5. But we're glad Marstus was keen sighted enough to spot the lucky buck and cash in on it before he slipped it to the bum.

You'll note that these lucky bucks which I'm buying back for $100 or $5 each are in circulation wherever the Boston Evening American is read. You're just as likely to find one in Springfield, Providence or down on the Cape as you are in Boston, Mattapan or Saugus.

Just keep your eyes peeled for them. They're bound to show up. Thousands of folks keep the Boston American's daily list of lucky bucks ready for reference when those old $1 bills appear.

All lucky bucks published in the Boston American must be redeemed within one week from the first date of the publication of the serial number.

MARTHA LEE'S JELLY RECIPES

GET out the scissors and clip the jelly recipes I have for you today, for I know you will find them reliable and ones that you will use year after year. Someone tried to tell me that no one makes home-made jams and jellies any more, but I just pointed to the pile of letters on my desk asking for directions for just this form of cookery.

Martha Lee

And if you have ever tried to buy a jar of honest-to-goodness pure-fruit jelly, you'll know that it has a very substantial value. Putting up only a few jars at a time every few days during the berry and small fruit season is an easy way to accumulate a stock of which even grandmother might well be proud and yet without a noticeable setback in time or money.

CURRANT JELLY

Pick the currants when dry and wash them. Squeeze or mash into a preserving kettle and cook slowly until the skins look shriveled and empty. Strain through the colander and allow the juice to drip through a jelly bag. Measure back into the kettle, bring quickly to the boiling point and boil 5 minutes. Add measure for measure of sugar, boil for a few minutes longer and test with a spoon. Remove from the fire at once and pour into the glasses, placing a hot spoon in each one as it is filled to prevent breakage. When cool pour hot, melted paraffin on the top of each glass to prevent moulding. After the paraffin is cold the glasses should be covered with tin lids or with tight paper covers.

BARBERRY JELLY

Pick over fruit; wash and drain. Allow 1 cupful of water to 1 peck of barberries. Mash a few of the berries in the bottom of the preserving kettle, using a wooden potato masher, continuing until all are mashed. Cook slowly until soft. Strain through a coarse strainer, then allow the juice to drip through a double thickness of cheesecloth or through a jelly bag.

Measure the juice, bring to the boiling point and boil 5 minutes. Add an equal measure of heated sugar and boil 3 minutes; skim, and pour into sterilized glasses. When cold cover with hot paraffin, being sure that the entire top is covered.

TRUMBULL WILL CALL SPECIAL SESSION

Hartford, Ct., July 27 (AP)—Gov. Trumbull today recognized "the existence of an emergency" in the invalidation of 1483 laws by the Supreme Court decision to the extent of returning to Connecticut by airplane from Association Island, Lake Ontario, where he attended a meeting of officials of electrical companies controlled by the General Electric Co.

The governor on Monday will order a special session of the 1929 general assembly to reenact the invalid laws.

Governor Trumbull, who Friday announced his plan of leaving Association Island Sunday, had become so convinced of the emergency that he telephoned Maj. William F. Ladd, commanding officer of the 43d Division Aviation, and arranged for a plane to pick him up today at Buffalo, N. Y.

In all probability in the Governor's proclamation Monday the General Assembly will be called into special session for Tuesday, August 6, this, in the opinion of the leaders of the State government, being the earliest possible date in which the proclamation could be served by the sheriffs, and the House and Senate notified to appear.

OFFICIAL STATE WAR RECORD PRESENTED

Presentation of the official volume, containing the record of every Massachusetts resident who died in the World War, began today in the State House, under the direction of Frederic W. Cook, secretary of state.

The volume contains the records of 5,771 veterans—men and women, who were inducted into the service from Massachusetts and died during the World War or shortly after its termination as the result of wounds or disease suffered in the service.

MOTHER IS HONORED

One of the first to receive a volume was Mrs. Henry Roberts of Capen st., Dorchester. a Gold Star mother, whose son, Thomas J. Roberts, was killed in action on April 2, 1918. The Thomas J. Roberts Post 216, American Legion, of Dorchester, is named for the veteran, who lost his life in a battle in the Bois de Redstone, state librarian, Capt. Ethen Putnam compiled the records.

ONLY 7500 COPIES

The names and records of many women who served in the war as yeomen (F.), in the Navy, and as nurses and in other capacities in hospitals in France, and who died during service, are given in the official record. Seventy-five hundred copies of the record have been printed for free distribution.

Supervisor Sliney, himself a veteran of the Spanish War and of the World War, said all that is required for parents or widows of veterans who died during the war to receive copies of the volume, is a brief statement containing information required by the secretary of state showing they are entitled to the volume.

TO TEST NEW MOTOR

By GEORGE W. HAMBLIN

After three months flying with the airplane he designed and built, Dick Engel is ready to install the Palmer engine, and go places. The installation is being done at the factory in Hillsgrove, R. I., and some definite word is expected by the writer within 24 hours. If the ship is successful with the four-cylinder Palmer engine, Dick plans to go into production immediately, and get the "Little Chief" on the market.

The Palmer motor was designed and built by Mr. Palmer of Brookline ave., and the four cylinders deliver 75 horsepower. Should the motor be successful, Dick can fly for four hours on about 20 gallons of gas, and will revolutionize aircraft motors.

Engel's tests with the new style power plant bring to a close 18 years of experimenting by Palmer, during which he was confronted by all possible obstacles.

We have been promised the first ride given to a newspaperman, if the motor delivers the goods, and we sure enough will keep Dick to his promise.

A formation of Curtiss tri-motored Fords took off for the Cape on the regular evening trip to Nantucket. Ralph Wickford and Lowell Bayles piloted the ships. The reason for both ships making the run was that Bob Fotte booked nine passengers out of Boston, 12 out of Hyannis and nine out of Edgartown. Of course, plenty of passengers were dropped off at Hyannis and Edgartown, as the spacious capacity of the giant Fords would have been overtaxed. Foote has been promising to load both ships up some Friday night. He succeeded.

If one were to drop into the main Curtiss office on Congress st., one would find Mr. Foote surrounded by two stenographers, four telephones and scores of people looking for questions to be answered. We think Bob is pretty near the busyiest man in commercial aviation in this man's town.

Most of the Curtiss mechanics are engaged in moving the entire equipment to the new hangar, and the shop stuff in temporary quarters on Orleans st., where Granville had his shop. E. L. "Red" Riley, and his cohort, Parker McGreevy, declare that the new hangar and shop will be the finest in New England, and that the temporary shop will be in operation only long enough till the new place is finished.

Maybe this means that the wooden hangar is to be removed right soon, huh?

The whereabouts of the poor little "Fish Ball," the pride of Frank "Shorty" Corcoran's navy, has been finally ascertained. Fish Ball a dinky little row boat, as you know, was stolen one dark night and finally landed in Hingham. Fish Ball now repose in the nasty ole Hingham jail, languishing behind the barz, and yearning for the good ole daze when he could slide over the water under Shorty's masterful seamanship.

Don Mason, formerly pilot for the Puritan Air Transport, of Fall River, took his transport license examination and intended to fly for a new company being formed in North Adams. The new outfit will operate three American Eagles for the start, one powered with a Wright 165 horse Whirlwind, and the other two with Kinner engines of 400 horsepower.

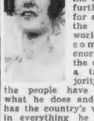
The Curious Quizzer

Residents of Medford Answer His Question and Pose for Picture

THE QUESTION

Do you believe that President Hoover's naval construction program is justly opposed?



MRS. CAROLYN B. WEST, Fulton st.—If President Hoover has decided to suspend construction of naval vessels he has done so with the firm conviction that his act will tend for furtherance of peace for all time between the nations of the world. A man who commanded the enormous vote of the country by such a tremendous majority shows that the people have dependence in what he does and they know he has the country's welfare at heart in everything he does. Nobody wants war, but if there is too much preparedness for war we will feel that our naval strength is so great that we ought to fight some other nation to show how strong we are.

ROBERT P. CAMPBELL, Fulton st.—History has proved that unpreparedness has caused great sacrifices for our people. To be trained is to be prepared, and any cut in our trained forces, military or naval, means unpreparedness. We need every battleship and every cruiser we have now in the navy and, instead of suspending the building of warships, I think additional ones should be built as an insurance against possible trouble with other nations. I do not agree with the President in his determination to stop further construction of naval ships.

FRANK E. McCUNE, Fulton st.—It would be very wrong to restrict the construction of vessels for navy service. For the country's protection I feel that too many ships cannot be ready in case of trouble with some foreign power. By the suspension of work on the battle cruisers now under way, a great many skilled workmen will be thrown out of their positions. And the loss of work will result in making the men's families unhappy and they will blame the government for their condition. We should not begin to destroy our war fleet of first class ships until the other nations show by their example that they intend to put their ships in the scrap heap.

* * *

MRS. JOHN J. HICKEY, Fulton st.—Our nation is at peace now with all the world. To keep the country in that condition it is necessary to have a strong navy. Our safety depends on big fighting vessels, fleets of airships cruisers, submarines and a trained army. To continue in safety from warfare I should see to it that we had a larger supply of battleships rather than to decrease the number we now have.

Jails Reserve Cop Who Defied Court

Thomas Leo Qualters, reserve officer of the Waltham police, will probably be careful of his words if he ever appears in court again. Arraigned before Judge Cunniff in Waltham today charged with non-support of his wife and child, Qualters was found guilty and ordered to pay $10 a week. He told the court he "wouldn't work" and he "wouldn't pay." Judge Cunniff thereupon revoked the original order and sentenced him to 30 days in the House of Correction. He appealed.

ROBIN FLIERS USE GULF PRIDE

Gulf Pride Oil 120 is lubricating the motor of the St. Louis Robin in its history-making endurance flight, the Gulf Refining Co. announced today. It is the same grade oil used in establishing a number of other aircraft and world records.

Three hundred consecutive hours of operation of the Robin's motor at three-fourths throttle have resulted in 25,000,000 revolutions and 75,000,000 cylinder explosions. Piston travel for all six cylinders is over 25,000 miles.

TRIP OF LINDY CLUB 'DREAM COME TRUE'

Editor's note—The Boston Evening American today publishes the fourth story written by boys and girls of the Lindbergh Club about their trip to Washington for writing the best essay on "What Lindy Means to Me."

The following story about the trip was written by Ruth E. Peters, 33 Madison ave., Everett.

No other incident of my young life, will I remember, as long as I will my trip to Washington. It was one grand dream come true! It was a thing I shall be glad to speak of in the future. I only wish that everyone could have made that same trip.

As I climbed the steps of the United States Capitol and strolled through the beautiful rooms of the White House, and sat in the President's chair, I felt as though I were the heroine of some great deed and this was my reward.

But when I stepped inside of the Smithsonian Institution and the Spirit of St. Louis stared me in the face—why! that was the last "straw." I surely thought that then and there, my bubbles of dreams would burst suddenly. But, no such thing happened. Instead!—one grand surprise after another.

White marble buildings stretched far and wide against the blue sky. The towering Washington Monument could be seen from almost any point. Memorials of great heroes; homes of former presidents; foreign legations; Washington Zoo; Arlington Cemetery, the Grave of Unknown Soldier, Pan-American Union; Christ Episcopal Church, where Washington and Lee worshipped; the theater where Abraham Lincoln was assassinated; the home across the street, where he died; the old Carlyle House; Bureau of Engraving and Printing. All these and many more were the places visited.

To me the most picturesque and the most interesting of all, was Washington's home at Mount Vernon, Virginia. It is one of the most beautiful spots I have ever seen.

I had the grandest, most wonderful time of my life, which was made possible through the efforts of my own and the untiring spirit of the Boston Evening American Lindbergh Club.

Upholds Practices of Enforcement Agents

Editor Boston American:

A letter printed in your columns and signed "Temperance Worker" irked me considerably and I am moved to write an answer.

The letter writer, who declared that prohibition could never be enforced, is evidently one of those misinformed individuals who are blinded by their own fanfros. Although he denies it, I have a suspicion that he has a taste for alcoholic beverages. He would have us believe that all police departments are corrupt and that graft runs riot through our federal prohibition enforcement ranks.

The facts of the case are well known to the Anti-Saloon League and to others whose true interest lies in the welfare of the people. Graft is a remote exception in our splendid police departments and it is safe to say that not one in 500 federal officers could be bribed. The few incidents of graft and corruption are being magnified by the unscrupulous liquor drinkers.

"Temperance Worker" advises wine for the brain worker, beer for the laborer and whiskey for the sick. The keenest brains never were wine-sodden, beer would have been industry's downfall had it remained and any physician will tell you whiskey for the sick is as so much poison.

Plenty of water and milk, with tea, cocoa and cofies in moderation, is my recipe for a healthy nation.

Lauds Jamaica Plain as Beauty Spot

Editor Boston American:

How many readers of the Boston American know the beauties of Jamaica Pond and Arnold Arboretum, which are within easy walk of each other? To the family not familiar with the Boston park system I suggest a visit to both places. They are ideal for picnics and a delight to the children—plenty of massive trees, lots of grass, and in the case of the former, plenty of swans for the kiddies to feed and good boats from which to view the passing show from the water. As a place for readers to enjoy a good book under ideal conditions I recommend either place.

Would "Padlock" Cars of Reckless Drivers

Editor Boston American:

I have a suggestion that may help instill into reckless drivers of automobiles, fear, if not respect for the life and safety of others. It is this.

Whenever an operator is found guilty of causing death or serious injury through gross negligence, or when a person is found guilty of driving under the influence of liquor, not only should his license be revoked, but the car itself should be "padlocked" and be barred from the road until such time as the registrar of motor vehicles lifts the ban.

If a man realized that his car could not be operated by another after his license was revoked, he probably would think twice before violating automobile laws. I think that many accidents would be thus prevented as no owner of a car would entrust it to unfit persons if he knew that he would be held responsible for accidents.

Mother Seeks Truth About Camp Devens

Editor Boston American:

What is the truth about conditions at Camp Devens? It seems that one cannot take up a paper without reading something of a sensational nature concerning the camp, the soldiers or the officers quartered there. As the mother of four sons, two of whom have attended C. M. T. C. camps in past years, I am naturally interested in what goes on at Camp Devens.

I think that it is about time the truth of things be known. I am sure that other mothers wish to know whether or not the camp is a safe and desirable place for which to send their sons. I have always thought that the C. M. T. C. camps were a good thing. It is regrettable that these happenings have occurred, but as long as they have taken place, let the truth be known.

Horns to Replace Gas Rattles in U. S. Army

Washington, July 27 (AP)—The army has taken away the soldier's rattles.

It has been found that these accessories of the soldier's life, used in wartime for the unplayful purpose of warning against gas attacks, sounded too much like the "rat-a-tat" of machine gun fire. So today the War Department, on recommendation of the chiefs of the infantry and chemical warfare service, eliminated them from the field equipment.

An electric type horn will be employed hereafter for spreading alarms, notifying the soldiers to don their gas masks.

RUNYON Says—

Good "Divers" Scarce in Fight Circles

By DAMON RUNYON

Copyright, 1929, by N. Y. American, Inc.

IT seems that tankmen aren't what they used to be.

I mean to say, a noble calling has sadly deteriorated, a truly fine art has passed away, like the wearing of Van Dyke beards, and the kissing of my lady's hand and tobacco chewing.

The science of tanking it, as we say, survives, but in a sadly uncouth form. A lot of clerks and barbers have come into the profession that once had its artistic nature as its proudest boast. A gentleman was in to see me the other day bemoaning the situation, and asking me to take it up with the boxing commission to see if the breed of tankers can be improved.

The gentleman was a tankman of superior skill in his day, and in later years has handled tankmen on a large scale. In fact, the larger the scale a tankman is on, the better it suits the gentleman, because there is no considerable demand for small tankmen. It seems they do not make enough of a splash.

A tankman, Citizens, is a party of pugilistic posture who goes in the tank. In the good old days he was sometimes known as a diver, and tanking was described as doing a Kellermann, because in those days Miss Annette Kellermann was the world's champion diver.

But the term diver was considered approbious, or words to that effect, and the profession took up tankman, or tanker, as more genteel. The tankman finds employment in the art of tanking it from persons who desire knockouts in their records with a minimum of effort, and danger, although it is agreed that there isn't such a wide field for tankmen since James J. Tunney, formerly Gene, passed the stage of his career known as "building up."

The largest consumer of tankmen in the country today is The Flying Stribling, of Georgia, but he uses so many that he has finally turned to producing them himself, thus cutting down the overhead, and at the same time further limiting the field for union tankmen.

Helped Tunney Along

BEFORE the advent of The Flying Stribling, and Mr. Tunney, the big consumers of tankmen were Mr. Jack Dempsey and Mr. Bob Martin, the soldier-champion, though it developed that the Messrs. Jeems Bronson and Professor Will McCarney, who handled Mr. Bob Martin, were not above using the same tankman in different cognomenal guises now and over again, which led to protests from the Amalgamated Association of Journeymen Tankmen of America, and the United Kingdom.

Mr. James J. Tunney, formerly Gene, also used the same tankman a couple of times, but that was in the days of Mr. Tunney's geniality, when he liked to see familiar faces around him. Both Mr. Tunney and Mr. Martin rather preferred the Sergeant type of tankman, which was quite the vogue some years ago, Mr. Dempsey had no particular type preference, and The Flying Stribling also takes the run-of-mill product.

But you may take it from the gentleman who called on me, tankmen have gone back. They are lacking in finesse, and have none of the pride in their art that the old timers had. I was really distressed by the gentleman's statement of the situation.

"Why, Mr. Runyan, you'd be surprised what a lot of trambos the present tankmen are," he said. "You'd really be surprised. They are so dumb you can't even teach 'em to fall properly.

"You know," he continued, sadly, "a lot of guys think tanking it is very simple. They think that all a tankman has to do is to walk into that ring and fall down, but there is a great deal more to it than that.

"In the first place, a high class tankman, such as we had in the old days, must take a punch on the chin. I mean he must really take it. It doesn't necessarily have to be a hard punch, but it must be a punch. It must land. Half of the roodles who are around posing as tankmen nowadays and taking people's money for it, are afraid to take a punch on the chin.

"They want to go down from a body punch, which is no good. The customers don't always see it. It leaves them in doubt, and they go away complaining. But when a guy takes a punch on the chin everybody can see it, and nobody has a right to squawk.

Falling an Art

"THE matter of falling is very important, and you have to school a guy a long time in the gymnasium before he gets it down pat. I very seldom find a tankman prospect nowadays who can learn to fall properly. You know a guy should try to get up after he hits the floor, and then go down again from weakness, or struggle up on a rope and fall across a strand helpless, and it is tough work teaching the modern loogans all these fine points.

"A good tankman must be a bit of an actor. He ought to be able to pose around a town before a fight and put up a good show in the gymnasium, and take a nice battle to the reporters. A man who gets the kind of money a tankman does should learn a little showmanship. When I was tanking it I always gave the customers a wonderful thrill, a lot in the old days I had tankmen who knew all my tricks. A good tankman could make from $10,000 to $15,000 per year in those times, but it isn't so easy now on account of boxing commissions butting into your business wherever you go.

"Nowadays a tankman has to be careful or a boxing commission may grab his money, although I have never yet lost a dollar on that account. I have my tankmen too well schooled, although I've had a couple of narrow escapes and had to cry quite a little before I softened up some hard-hearted commissioners.

"But I consider it a great injustice for a commission to take a tankman's money if he has tanked it in good style, and the customers are satisfied, because, after all, a good tank act is often better than a regular fight, and I can prove it by a million witnesses. If the commissions would only co-operate with me and help improve the tankmen there would never be any complaint whatever."

Young Stribling Jailed for Flying

Tulsa, Okla., July 26 (AP)—The Tulsa jail house was a hostelry today for W. L. (Young) Stribling, Georgia heavyweight boxer, here for a fight next Monday night, and Johnny Hussong, Wichita, Kan., boxing promoter.

Stribling, flying a plane equipped with a siren, carried guests in a numberof trips over the city yesterday.

Stribling's bond was set at $250 and he was attempting to arrange it late today. Hussong's bond was set at $20, which he was expected to make without undue effort.

GIRL STARS COMPETE TODAY

CHICAGO, July 27—Three Boston girls, Rena MacDonald, Florence MacDonald and Olive Hasenfus, all New England champions and representing the New England district of the A. A. U., compete here today in the national women's track and field championship.

This trio of girl athletes, wearing the colors of the Boston Swimming Association, were members of Uncle Sam's girls' athletic squad, which went to Amsterdam last year. They will have to face many of their teammates on the trip to Holland last summer in today's meet.

Olive Hasenfus was the choice of New England officials to compete in the 50 and 100-yard events. She will have to meet the world's champion, Miss Betty Robinson of the Illinois A. C., who won the 100-meter dash at Amsterdam; Miss Eleanor Egg of Paterson, N. J., will also compete in the century.

RENA MacDONALD, strong and husky representative from Massachusetts, should have a field day. Miss MacDonald is slated to put the shotput, discus throw, and javelin throw. Rena is national indoor shotput champion, and holds the New England indoor and outdoor titles.

Miss Florence MacDonald, who was sixth in the 880-meter run in Amsterdam, last year, shows best in the 220-yard dash. The Boston flyer is looked upon as one of the best girl athletes of the country, in her trials she showed a world of speed.

Framingham A. C. Holds 10-Mile Run

The Framingham Athletic Club holds its first 10-mile handicap race this afternoon at 4 o'clock with over 30 starters already in line. The race, which is sanctioned by the New England A. A. A. U., is to be run over a half-mile track at the Union Avenue Athletic Field.

Many leading long distance runners have sent in their entries. The committee in charge have been assured by Clarence DeMar, Whitey Michelson and Jimmy Henigan that they will be present. The Dorchester A. A. is sending a full team of their crack runners.

Joe Quirk, a resident of Framingham and running under the colors of the Dorchester Club, has high hopes of winning not only the first prize for Framingham but another prize. A fine lot of prizes have been donated by the citizens and merchants of Framingham.

The officials are William Kenney, president of the N. E. A. A. U., referee; Benjamin B. Cook, starter; clerk of course; William H. McVicar, starter; Paul F. Bently, John Lozero and Thomas Kelley, all of the Dorchester Club, and Charles Leahy, South Boston A. C., judges; John J. McKittrick, Thomas Lilly and Daniel Morrison, Dorchester Club, timers; Philip McGowan, Dave Mallen, John Slattery, Robert E. Kerwin, Seth Carpenter, inspectors; Frank McGrath, N. E. A. A. U. handicapper.

Max Must Box Scott; Box Outside N. Y.; or Remain Idle

New York, July 27 (AP)—Max Schmeling, German heavyweight, was faced with three alternatives today as the outgrowth of the New York Athletic Commission's action in revoking his license as a fighter.

Herr Max now can decide to box entirely outside New York state; or swallow his pride and meet Phil Scott as the commission demands; or not fight at all.

The commission not only revoked Schmeling's license, but the manager's licenses of Joe Jacobs and Billy McCarney, the Teuton's preferred advisors, as well as until Schmeling consents to meet Scott for Humbert J. Fugazy, a bout arranged and signed for by Arthur Buelow, the manager Schmeling refuses to recognize, will the commission consent to be mollified.

The commission's action apparently has blocked Madison Sq. Garden hopes of staging a Schmeling-Jack Sharkey bout this fall.

TWINS RACE IN SCOTLAND

By PHYLLIS AND BERENICE ZITENFIELD,

Fifteen-Year-old Twins Training to Swim the English Channel

Dunoon, Scotland, July 27 — In just a few minutes now we will dive into the Firth of Clyde and start our three-mile race across that body of water against a field of Scottish swimmers.

Some of them look pretty good, but Bill Kellingsley, our trainer, is sure that we will come in under wraps. The swimmers up this way don't use the American crawl that has been developed so much perfection on the other side of the water. They use instead, for the most part, the old style trudgeon, a powerful stroke that gets you there, but is not practical for racing. Some of the European swimmers in their short dashes use the crawl stroke but it is not considered a good stroke for distance in Europe.

American swimmers who came over here during the Olympic games have given Europe a good idea of the crawl and some of their younger swimmers are trying to emulate the Americans, but so far they have not been able to compete with our stars.

We are both nearing the top of our form and Bill says it won't be long now before he starts us on the swim across the channel. As soon as we get back to Dover we'll start training in the open water, will probably make the swim as soon as the tides are right and the water calms down a bit.

STRAIGHT SET SWEEP FOR U. S. STARS

tests tomorrow to successfully defend the cup.

The victory for the young American team—Allison is only 18 and Van Ryn 23—was the climax of one of the greatest winning streaks ever scored in doubles play.

THIRD TITLE

Their triumph today followed capture of the Wimbledon championship and defeat of the Frenchmans in the interzone final Berlin. This is the first year Allison has participated in Davis Cup competition.

The Americans outplayed the French veterans consistently, capturing eleven of the first thirteen games with whirlwind attack and then possessing sufficient reserve to offset French rallies in the last two sets. Their teamwork was superior at all times.

Allison's dynamic service was a vital factor in the victory. It was broken through only once in eight times while Van Ryn lost his delivery three times. The latter, however, was unbeatable in the third set. Cochet dropped his service four times as did Borotra.

The players were late in taking the courts and spectators began a demonstration of impatience.

ALLISON SERVES.

Allison began serving in the first set and the Americans captured the opening game after a succession of whirlwind rallies. All four players volleyed so skillfully that the ball frequently did not touch the ground until after a half dozen exchanges. The American pair broke through Borotra's service to win the second game.

The crowd cheered the American boys enthusiastically as they quickly piled up a big lead over the redoubtable Frenchmen. They displayed not the slightest fear of Cochet's rifle-shot volleys and broke through his service to lead at 3—1. Allison's delivery was too much for the Frenchmen, who obtained only one point in the Americans won the fifth game.

Van Ryn and Allison took the last two games of the set with astonishing rapidity, completely upsetting the defenses of the Frenchmen.

The point scores, first set:

Van Ryn-Allison.. 403 644 5—30—6
Cochet-Borotra .... 245 210 3—17 1

The American collegians started the second set without any letup in their terrific pace. They broke through Cochet's service in the first game and led at 2—0, when Allison's smashing delivery again prevailed, over the best that the Frenchmen could offer in return.

The team work of the French showed no improvement. The American youths volleyed and smashed through two more games for a lead of 4—1. The two Frenchmen who were victorious separately yesterday seemed unable to strike their stride in combination. Cochet's service was again broken in the fifth game.

FRENCH RALLY

The French staged a big rally and took four successive games to force the set to deuce. Cochet dominated the French attack, volleying sensationally as he checked the American rush for the first time.

The Americans regained command in the twelfth game which they won to square the count, at 6—6, again concentrating their attack upon Borotra. The Basque was unsteady and Cochet, in efforts to cover extra ground, also was led into errors. The Americans led at 7—5 as they broke through Cochet's service for the third time in this set. They pulled the game out on Allison's service at 8—6.

The Frenchmen, their backs now to the wall, fought desperately to hold the Americans even as the set began, but it was a much closer match now and games went to 4-all on service. The turning came in the ninth game on Borotra's service. The American youths upset the Basque with craftily executed lobs and broke through to lead at 5-4, then scoring the decisive game for the set and match on Van Ryn's service.

Point score, second set:

Van Ryn-Allison.....
4 6 5 4 4 3 2 3 4 5 6 5—48—8
Cochet-Borotra—
2 4 3 2 5 4 4 4 6 4 3 2 3—45—6

0 4 1 4 1 4 0 4 4—26—6

Ruffing Seeks His Second Victory Over the Tigers Today

BIG PITCHER ALWAYS IS TRYING

By JOE CASHMAN

LARGE Charlie Ruffing scored his first local victory of the season at the expense of the Detroit Tigers on June 17. Before that, he had won one game on the road by pitching one inning. Since then, he has turned in one triumph at home and none out of town.

This afternoon, he is trying to gain his second victory over the Tigers, his third at Fenway Park and his fourth of the season anywhere.

This recital of Big C's winning efforts to date explains better than anything else why the Carrigans are so low in the standing.

Ruffing, even with the Sox, ought to be boasting of at least 10 victories at this writing. He has the stuff to be a .500 pitcher with any ball club.

Had he come close to living up to expectations this season the natives would be up fighting for sixth place instead of being deep in the basement.

RUFF'S inability to win has irked Hub fans more than any other local diamond failure of recent years.

It's been so long since our ball customers have had anything to cheer about, that they have become more or less accustomed to failure on the part of the native athletes and more or less tired of taking them to task for not producing.

But in Ruffing's case, it is different. He has been so brilliant on occasions that the populace is convinced that he has the ability to be a winning pitcher. So they are all het up over his poor showing and go so far as to attribute it to lack of effort on his part.

Perhaps they can't be blamed for arriving at that conclusion, but it is a grave injustice to the big pitcher, just the same.

All stories, rumors and reports to the contrary notwithstanding, Ruffing is trying as hard as he knows how to win every time out.

Those who know Bill Carrigan needn't be told this. Bill may have the patience of Job but he never would or never will stand for a quitter.

If Ruffing were not trying, he wouldn't be with the team.

RUFFING hasn't been a winning pitcher because he hasn't had any luck. In fact, he has had more ill luck this season than the average player experiences during a five-year career.

Everything has gone wrong for him. In most of his games, he has pitched good baseball but every time he started, it was a sign for his mates to get a lot of bad errors out of their system and prove next to useless with the stick.

And on the few occasions when he was accorded perfect support and handed a few runs, he, himself, was having off days, which all pitchers, no matter how great, have now and then.

DESPITE all the misfortune which has attended his efforts, Ruff is not downhearted. He is still confident of winning several games for the Sox and intends to start doing this in a hurry.

He has failed so often, that few will bet on his chances against the hard hitting Tigers, but, at that, there is reason for believing that his luck has changed and that he may succeed.

On Wednesday last, he was called in cold to hold the St. Louis Browns in check. The visitors had the tying runs on second and third bases, nobody was out and three of Dan Howley's best sticklers, including Heinie Manush, were coming to the bat.

It appeared to be a very bad spot for an unlucky pitcher like Charlie, but he prevented any scoring while he sent the three enemy batters down in order: one on a strikeout, the other two via the infield pop route.

It required ability, effort, gameness and luck to do that.

If Charlie carries all these qualifications into battle today he should beat the Tigers.

Vic Sorrell, one of the slowest and most deliberate hurlers in the game, is slated to be his opponent.

DUNPHY DEFEAT IS SURPRISE

Newport, R. I., July 27—P. A. Savage of Baltimore provided a surprise in the second round of the championship flight of the Newport Golf Club's tournament when he defeated Chris Dunphy, ex-Southern champion, 3 and 2.

Tommy Tailer's victory over K. O. McColl, ex-Rhode Island State champion, was expected, but it was not believed that the margin would be quite as wide.

BUD GORMAN OF B. C. FINDS WORK IS JUST PLAY

A hard-working bridgekeeper is Bud Gorman of Charlestown, who toils daily on the North Chelsea draw. Bud is interested in the duties of commerce, but his chief object is to keep himself in trim for the coming Boston College grid season and, incidentally, to gather a little money, which sometimes comes in handy to a young man working his way through college. He's a guard on Joe McKenney's squad. Bud weighs 189 pounds, is 5 feet 11 inches tall and is but 20 years old.

Football Star Works as Bridge Tender

By JOHN GILLOOLY

WHOO-EE! Traffic is stopped, the gates locked and the North Chelsea drawbridge swings open to allow the passage of another barge into the waters of the harbor.

This might be just a common occurrence for the motorists who pass up and down Chelsea st. daily and for the craft whose whistles automatically cause the great arms to swing aloft.

But this frequently performed task has more than a little significance in the daily life of Richard "Bud" Gorman of Charlestown who works as an attendant at the above-mentioned trestle.

Some may have noticed the way this boy goes about his routine. The nonchalance of the every-day gatetender, who leaves the impression of a nap between every bridge opening, is curiously missing.

He goes into his job with plenty of pep—as though he might be working his way upward with aspirations for some day getting the honor of keeping a bigger and better bridge. But, as you probably know, the future in this particular game wouldn't be too inspiring to the ordinary youth.

All of which led to the solution that Mr. Gorman has no bridge-keeping ambitions. On the other hand his object in view is to be tough enough to play first-string guard for Boston College's football team this coming fall.

Gorman could take life rather easy on the North Chelsea bridge. He's one of three assistants and, although the job has some import in the progress of Hub shipping, there really isn't too much physical strain on the attendants. Practically all the hard work is done by electrical machinery.

He often jumps off the pier for a short swim during lunch hour and keeps a watchful eye on the surroundings to see that everything goes smoothly, and that there are no water casualties—drownings, suicides, etc.

A year ago, as a sophomore, Bud reported for the B. C. team under McKenney. In practice he suffered a bad head injury. But he came back to the game after a short rest period, and filled the role of a substitute. Tens Wilcewski and Don Sheehan, veterans of three seasons, were the guards, and Bud couldn't budge these boys out of their berths.

WILCZEWSKI and Sheehan will be missing next fall and Gorman will have a fine opening. He's got the perfect build for a guard. His poundage is well divided over a 5 foot 11 inch frame. He's fast as a whippet and knows football.

Bud captained the Boston College high football team of 1926 and was the star of the game with the Holy Cross freshmen in his first year at the Heights.

He was vice-president of his class in freshman and sophomore years and will be president of this body next year as a junior. His popularity also touches the official offices where his high marks in studies have cemented his all-around good-standing.

So if you should notice a bridge-keeper, bridge-keeping more than usual don't be astonished. It may be another college football player.

With a pair of games this afternoon and a single contest billed for tomorrow, the Twi League fans would be in for a meager weekend if it were not for the fact that all the struggles listed promise red-hot action.

Today's pastimes bring Roslindale to Quincy and Malden to Rockland. Quincy battles Salem at Donovan Field tomorrow.

The Twi horizon seems to have cleared a bit, now that Sid Paterson has decided to keep his Granite City nine in Quincy. Things are running smoothly at Salem, a rumored center of discontent, and Dorchester is jubilant over the return of Johnny Marshall, snappy shortfielder, who was tendered a testimonial by his team-mates and players on the Malden club on his return to the lineup last night. Marshall has been sadly missed from the Galvin clan's lineup ever since that evening some weeks ago when he injured his leg sliding.

The Roslindale club, in the midst of a war with Salem for first place, meets Quincy on the latter's diamond today.

John Dixon is scheduled to twirl for the slugging invaders while Les Andrews will toe the rubber for the home team.

Malden journeys to Rockland still hopeful of stepping out into the victory trail.

Lockland will use Lou Strecker against Malden. The visitors have Bilsh groomed for the fray.

Braves in Twin Bill at Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH, July 27—Harry Selbold, who was sidetracked in favor of Ed Brandt in the first Forbes Field contest between the Braves and Pirates, and Red Smith, who essayed, unsuccessfully, the rescue role in that battle, were Johnny Ever's mound selections for today's double-header.

Selbold seems to have a little bit on Big Buccos. He beat them when they last visited Boston and feels sure he can repeat the trick today. Bobby Smith, who made his big league pitching debut by beating Pittsburgh, expects to annex his half of the twin bill, also.

Boston's chances were made somewhat better when two of the Buccos, Paul Waner and George Grantham, were put out of the game by a collision. Their condition is not at all serious, but the doctors say both will be out of the games today and that the outfielder may not be able to get back for several more days. Grantham, however, should be fit Monday.

N. E. League Notes

By CHARLES HOFFMAN.

Jerry Lyons, who tied Tris Speaker's record for consecutive base hits and then was put on the sidelines by a line drive, was stopped in his attempt to break the record in his first time at bat since his injury. He batted twice and went hitless.

Manchester has acquired the services of Gray, a pitcher from Albany in the Eastern League, for the rest of the season to help out the pitching staff in the absence of Lovely, who broke his leg.

Ray Heffner, who caught for the Manchester team in the old Twilight League is back with Manchester only in a different circuit. Heffner once played with the Pittsburgh team.

After losing five straight games and tieing one Lewiston returned home and won its first victory in a week against Stavrolli.

The fans up in Portland seem to be riding Synder, the outfielder for the Mariners pretty hard. The chap plays pretty good baseball and players cannot understand why they are on this particular man so much.

Four games on the schedule for today. New Bedford goes to Lynn, Brockton travels to Nashua, Manchester plays at Lewiston and Haverhill stacks up against Portland in the latter city.

Russ Saunders is pushing Bill Lehman hard for the batting honors and may pass the New Bedford third sacker by the middle of the week.

The players around the circuit claim that Dan Blossom bought a base hit up at Lewiston for a dime.

Now hat Lyons is back at the first sack for Lewiston Hop Ruppel is back in the outfield where he belongs. Hop looked unnatural at first and he knew it himself but like the good soldier that he is he goes where he is told. And now Asa Small will take his turn in the box as Lewiston is up against it for pitchers with Diehl and Wolfe on the shelf. Asa in his last game held Haverhill to four hits.

Six Matches Today in Old Colony League

In the Old Colony Tennis League series, six clashes are on the docket for this afternoon. There will be three in each of the league's two divisions. In the first division, the Arlington Heights Tennis Club will take on the West Medford Tennis Club on the Heights courts; the Winsor Club of Watertown, last year's league champion, will meet the Bellevue Golf Club players on the latter's courts in Melrose and the Winthrop Tennis Club will meet the Winchester Tennis Associates at Winchester.

In the second division, the Burr Tennis Club of Newton and the Sagamore Tennis Club will play on the latter's courts in West Medford; the Neighborhood Club of Waban will play the Boston Young Men's Christian Association on the latter's courts, and the Belmont Tennis Club will meet the Woodland Club of Malden on the former's courts in Belmont.

Mrs. Raymond Wins

Pittsfield, July 27—Mrs. Ruth Raymond of Baton Rouge, La., defeated Miss Margaret Hayden of Schenectady, 3 to 2, in the annual Stockbridge Country Club women's tournament.

IN THE BEGINNING OF BASEBALL—No. 1

By SAM CARRICK

The Case for Abner Doubleday

AN unnamed Britisher, viewing baseball for the first time, is reported to have exclaimed: "Why, it's nothing more than our game of rounders."

Remarks of this nature made during the first round-the-world baseball tour (1888-89) set the late Albert G. Spalding thinking. The more Spalding thought, the more he became convinced that the Britisher and the others were wrong, and that baseball was a game of distinct American origin.

Some years later, Spalding became involved in a friendly dispute with Henry Chadwick, the "Father of Baseball," as to how the game began, Chadwick defending and Spalding vehemently denying the rounders theory. To settle the question, Spalding appointed a commission consisting of A. G. Mills, third president of the National League; Arthur P. Gorman, then a U. S. Senator; Morgan G. Bulkeley, also a federal Senator and the first president of the National League; Alfred J. Reach, old-time ball player and Philadelphia sporting goods manufacturer; George Wright, now of Boston, and Nicholas E. Young, fourth president of the National League, to look into and report on the origin and development of baseball.

James T. Sullivan, then president of the A. A. U. and head of the American Sports Publishing Co. (a Spalding house), acted as secretary to the commission.

Mills, who headed the commission, under date of Dec. 30, 1907, wrote to Sullivan, setting forth in some detail the theory that the game of baseball had its origin in Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1839, and that it was virtually the invention of Abner Doubleday, at that time a pupil in Green's Select School in that town. In this finding, the remainder of the commission concurred.

The evidence has never been fully made public.

MUCH stress was put upon the letters of one Abner Graves to Spalding and cited by the latter in his communication to the commission under date of July 25, 1907. Spalding writes:

"Mr. Abner Graves was a boy playmate and fellow pupil of Abner Doubleday at Green's Select School in Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1839. Mr. Graves, who is still living, says that he was present when Doubleday first outlined, with a stick, in the dirt, the present diamond-shaped Base Ball field, indicating the location of players in the field, and afterward saw him make a diagram of the field on paper, with a crude pencil memorandum of the rules of the new game, which he named 'Base Ball.' As Mr. Graves was one of the youths that took part in the new game under Doubleday's direction, his interesting and positive account of the incident is certainly entitled to serious consideration."

In recording his decision in a letter to Secretary Sullivan, mentioned above, Chairman Mills of the commission says:

"My belief had been that our National Game of Base Ball' originated with the Knickerbocker Club, organized in New York in 1845, and which club published certain elementary rules that year; but in the interesting and pertinent testimony, for which we are indebted to Mr. A. G. Spalding, appears a circumstantial statement by a reputable gentleman, according to which, the first known diagram of the diamond, indicating positions for the players, was drawn by Abner Doubleday in Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1839."

MILLS goes on to note that Doubleday later was graduated from West Point and to give instances of Doubleday's military career. Then the letter gets back to baseball. Mills writes:

"In the days when Abner Doubleday attended school in Cooperstown, it was a common thing for two dozen or more schoolboys to join in a game of ball. Doubtless, as in my later experience, collisions of players in attempting to catch the batted ball were frequent, and injury due to this cause, or to the practice of putting out the runner by hitting him with the ball, often occurred.

"I can well understand how the orderly mind of the embryo West Pointer would devise a scheme to limit the contestants on each side and allotting them to field positions, each with a certain amount o' territory; also substituting the existing method of putting out the base runner for the old one of 'plugging' him with the ball."

FARTHER down in the same letter Mills writes:

"I am also much interested in the statement made by Mr. Curry, of the pioneer Knickerbocker Club, and confirmed by Mr. Tassle, of the famous old Atlantic Club of Brooklyn, that a diagram, showing the ball field laid out substantially as it is today, was brought to the field one afternoon by a Mr. Wadsworth. Mr. Curry says: 'The plan caused a great deal of talk, but, finally, we agreed to try it' While he is not quoted as adding that they did both try and adopt it, it is apparent that such was the fact; as, from that day to this, the scheme of the game described by Mr. Curry has been continued with only slight variations in details. It should be borne in mind that Mr. Curry was the first president of the old Knickerbocker Club, and participated in drafting the first published rules of the game.

"It is possible that a connection, more or less direct, can be traced between the diagram drawn by Doubleday in 1839 and that presented to the Knickerbocker Club by Wadsworth in 1845, or thereabouts, and I wrote, several days ago, for certain data bearing on this point, but, as it has not yet come to hand, I have decided to delay no longer sending in the kind of paper your letter calls for, promising to furnish you with inclosed data when I obtain it, whenever it may be.

"My deductions from the testimony submitted are:

"First: That 'Base Ball' had its origin in the United States.

"Second: That the first scheme for playing it, according to the best evidence obtainable to date, was devised by Abner Doubleday at Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1839."

Quincy to Open New Field Tomorrow

THE HURJA A. C. will face off with the Dorchester A. A., Dorchester Twi League leaders, in the dedication exercises of the new Ward 3 playground in Quincy, tomorrow.

The Finnish band will be present to furnish music for the flag raising and dedication exercises by the city officials. It is hoped that Mayor McGrath will be well enough to attend the opening and throw out the first ball. In the event that he is not present some other official, acting for the mayor, will do the honors.

The Finnish organization has long been famous for the distance runners and track stars. As many former sprinters are on the team, they should be hard to beat as base runners. Tuomikoski, former Olympic runner, is a member of the team, and Carl Luide, Ralph Williams and John Holly, all former track stars, are in the line-up.

The Dorchester A. A. will have such sterling stars as Radigan in left field, C. Sanford at shortstop, Murphy at first base and Krauss on the mound. Radigan is one of the hardest hitters in the Dorchester circuit, frequently producing doubles, triples and home runs for the league leaders. Krauss has stopped some of the fastest teams in New England with his six-light hurling and should lead his team to victory.

This is the first year that the Hurja A. C. has sponsored a baseball club, and the team has met with marked success in its many games. It is playing some of the snappiest outfits in this district, and in another year should be knocking off the best of the semi-pro clubs. Bill Maison is managing the club, and may be reached by phoning Granite 0841-R.

Bertazzolo Plans for Quick Victory

Riccardo Bertazzolo is planning to cut loose in hopes of winning early from Jim Maloney when these bitter rivals renew their dispute feud at Braves Field, Monday night, August 12.

The great strength and stamina of the Italian simply conquered Hub fans when he nearly rushed Maloney off his feet in their first meeting and with the experience gained in that bout, Bertazzolo should prove more dangerous this time.

SOME of the most prominent tournaments of the season are listed for next week, namely, the Jaques Cup, the Winchester Father and Son and the Marshfield open handicap medal play tournaments.

The New England professional golfers' organization and the Newspapermen's Golf Association start the ball rolling on Monday. The N. E. P. G. A. will be at the Manchester, N. H., Country Club for a 36-hole amateur-pro tournament, while the "Scribes" will journey in large numbers to the Unicorn Country Club.

After an off day on Tuesday, the Winchester Country Club stages its annual father and son tournament, which promises to bring out the largest field in its history of this event, and the boys will play the qualifying round of the Wyantenuck Country Club medal and match play tournament on the M. G. A. schedule and some of the leading golfers from this section will participate.

The Jaques Cup, which is rapidly regaining its old time prestige opens on Thursday with an 18-hole qualifying round. This tournament is open to all 30 and under players in this state.

There will be two open handicap medal play tournaments, Friday and Saturday. The Marshfield Country Club and Highland Country Club of Attleboro entertain the open tournament players on Friday and Saturday. Marshfield is anxious to eclipse the tournament of last year, when they drew a record breaking field, while Highland expects a larger entry.

GERMAN GIRLS BECOME FINE ATHLETES

High schools throughout the Fatherland, with rare exceptions, have made athletic drills for women mandatory. International Newsreel photo shows class of pupils being put through a cross-country run. This and other exercises are building up a fine type of German womanhood.

Upwards of 1200 at Saratoga Track

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., July 27—Upward of 1200 of the best thoroughbreds of the strongest racing stables in the United States are gathered here for the 27th August meeting which begins Monday with revivals of the Flash stakes and the Saratoga handicap as first day features.

The Flash, a sprint of five furlongs and a half, will bring a smart field of two-year-olds together to compete for $7500. The Saratoga handicap has entered a bunch of the best three-year-olds and up that will have appeared all season. They collap one mile and a quarter for $10,000.

There are three times as many horses here as are necessary for a meeting of five weeks. It will be impossible of course to find profitable employment for them.

Almost equally as attractive as the racing are the yearling sales. Saratoga having become in the last 10 or a dozen years the marketing place of the finest young thoroughbreds raised on this side of the Atlantic.

Bargains of these sales have been Man o' War, Cavtarra, Lord Chancer, Master Charlie, In Memoriam, Parazen 2d, Justice F. Golden Prince, Windy City, Calf Roper, Vermaja, Crack Brigade, The Spare, Karl Ester, Roguish Eye, The Bearer, etc.

The purse distribution this season should reach $600,000 and 38 stakes will be revived, the most important being the Hopeful Saratoga Special and the Spinaway for two-year-olds; the Travers and Alabama for three-year-olds; the Saratoga handicap, Whitney, Champlain, Merchants and Citizens handicap and the Saratoga cup for three-year-olds and over, and the Shillelah, North American, Revenge and Saratoga Steeplechase handicaps for jumpers.

Jack High, winner of last summer's Hopeful, but beaten this year in a Withers and a Belmont by Blue Larkspur, which he conquered in the Hopeful, is to have another shot at the Edward Riley-Bradley colt, whose seasons earnings exceed $153,000, in the Travers, Aug. 17.

The Travers will be a gallop of one mile and a quarter. But there will be other contestants, probably Flag Day, Frisius, Dr. Freeland, Black Diamond, African, Falking, The Nut and Live Oak. The Nut, Live Oak, Flag Day and Frisius are strictly developments of this season's racing.

STAGE AND SCREEN

DREAM IS NOW THE TRUTH

By J. MURRAY ANDERSON

TUESDAY night of next week, a dream of over 20 years will be realized by young Henry Sullivan, the composer of many of the numbers in "Murray Anderson's Almanac" opening at the Colonial on that evening. Mr. Sullivan determined, when as a small boy in sailor suits he attended Victor Herbert's operas at that famous old theater, that one day, he too, would have a premier at the Colonial. And now his wish is to be gratified. Boston is home to him, although he was born in Worcester. However, he studied at the New England Conservatory of Music for 12 years, and knows every stick and stone in Boston's streets.

HIS college days at Dartmouth were interrupted by the war but upon his return from France he graduated

Henry Sullivan

Lehar of "Merry Widow" fame, and of Edmund Eysler. With the latter he composed a revue which was produced successfully in Vienna. "Murray Anderson's Almanac" is the first production for which Mr. Sullivan has supplied practically the entire score, Milton Ager composing the other numbers. "Caught in the Rain," one of the hits of "The Little Show," now at the Music Box, is Mr. Sullivan's.

NOT yet 30 years old, Mr. Sullivan is just beginning a career which promises to be very bright. His music shows the Viennese influence, having the delightful lilt and swing which characterizes Lehar's compositions. A large delegation of Worcester friends of the young composer will be in attendance on Tuesday night to lend their moral support and applause.

THE cast is headed by the inimitable Trixie Friganza, deliciously droll Roy Atwell, and Jimmy Savo who has been called the funniest man in vaudeville. Eleanor Shaler, recently returned from the Ambassadeurs in Paris and an engagement in London in "Tin Gods," William Griffith, and Fred Keating, the magician, share honors in the billing.

The New Plays

SHUBERT—"The Street Singer," a musical comedy. In cast are Queenie Smith, Guy Robertson, Andrew Tombes, Harry K. Morton, Frank Lalor. Produced by Busby Berkeley.

PEGGY WOOD AND DIETRICH HAUPT

THE SOAP MAN'S salute is what Dietrich Haupt seems to be giving Peggy Wood standing by in "Wonder of Women," to be seen at Loew's State, next week.

DOLLY KRAMER AND PAT WEST

SAILOR'S HORNPIPE was never better done than by Pat West and Dolly Kramer in the topline revue on the big bill at the New B. F. Keith's, beginning today. Pat is an oldtime star.

MISS BURGESS is sweet demureness itself, in "Protection," at the Scollay Sq. She is able, too.

JOY ADMIRAL ON THE JOB

ARTHUR "PAT" WEST, star of Fanchon and Marco's Revue, "Goba of Joy," now playing at the New B. F. Keith's, is called the admiral of jesters and the gob of fun. Like Irvin Cobb, he hails from that staid old haunt of the southern gentleman Paducah, Ky. Pat and Cobb not only are great friends but both have that slight protuberance which goes with fun and good nature. Pat didn't grow up to be a Kentucky colonel because when he was four years old his folks took him to Cleveland. There Pat went to school and got a reputation for being Tom Sawyer's double in real life. Fanchon and Marco, great Western producers, launch for the first time in the East, one of their super-dreadnaughts. The cargo of merriment is in charge of "Pat" West, and the ship is manned by 15 incomparable entertainers, among them Scotty Weston, Dolly Kramer, Blair and Thornton, Moore and Moore, Hewitt and Jones, and Wanda Allen.

Vying with Arthur "Pat" West for headline honors, are the costars of musical comedy, Cecil Lean and Cleo Mayfield in a musical melange entitled "Hello Everybody."

William Nunn and company present a drama in the exact form in which it was produced and played in the year 1867.

Spain again sends to the Keith stage three of her foremost dancers, the Del Ortons.

TEUTON TALE IS FILMED

"MY SIX MONTHS IN GERMANY," is how Peggy Wood, famous stage star of "Buddies," "Candida," "The Clinging Vine" and other Broadway successes, describes her debut in talking pictures. Miss Wood plays the heroine in "Wonder of Women," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, on the screen at Loew's State the coming week. It is a German story.

"I never realized," says the actress, "how much detail is gone into in making screen settings authentic."

BUDDY ROGERS AND NATALIE KINGSTON

MISS KINGSTON gets a laugh out of what Buddy Rogers is doing to the ancient weapon in "The River of Romance," at the Metropolitan. It's a drama of Southern life.

Old Clo' Man Would Be Welcomed by Actress

Louise Fazenda, who specializes in eccentric roles such as she has in Warner Bros. big spectacle, "On With the Show," now playing at the Washington St. Olympia and Fenway is in constant need of old clothes. If an executive under a will of some elderly lady, is clearing the attic of her cast-off garments, it is an even bet that Miss Fazenda will be there to see what she can pick up.

"It is easy to obtain period costumes of 50 of 100 or 300 years ago," explains Miss Fazenda, "but it is extremely hard to obtain clothes that were worn 15 or 20 or 25 years ago. These seem to disappear as if by magic. Women get rid of them as hastily as possible as if not wishing ever to see them again."

Old Howard Reopens on Monday, August 19

The Mutual burlesque season will open at the Old Howard on August 19. As usual, the theater, in addition to the Mutual attraction, will have continuous vaudeville and high grade pictures.

This vaudeville will be booked through the R. K. O. The shows will be better and bigger than ever before with girls selected from the Mutual's own school of beauty.

COMES FROM FAR SOUTH

PAUL PAGE, who plays the role of Chic Slater in "Protection," now making its first Boston showing at the Scollay Square, is a native of the South — Birmingham, Ala. He is a graduate of Baltimore Polytechnic and of St. John's College in Annapolis, Md. His first role on the stage was an important one in the 1923 version of the Music Box Revue and his first role for the screen was the leading male role in "Speakeasy." "Protection" is based on a story by Frederick Hazlitt Brennan and pictures a terrific conflict between a fearless managing editor and a king of racketeers.

Paul Page

CHANGES HIS FACE OFTEN

SEVERAL years ago a famous detective character in fiction was "Cleek, the man with forty faces." The authors must have in mind Lucien Littlefield, who plays the role of Vilma Banky's uncle in the latter's first talking picture, "This Is Heaven," on view at Loew's Orpheum next week. Littlefield started character parts almost at the beginning of his career and soon developed an instinct for disguise that was almost uncanny in stage and screen parlance, this is called the art of makeup but even Nick Carter in his palmiest days had nothing on the young actor when it came to altering his aspect quickly and effectively.

Looking Ahead

August 12—

"Follow Thru," at the Majestic. Produced by Schwab and Mandel, with Bobby Jarvis, Beth Meaking, John Philbrick, Ruth Testen, Blanche Bow in cast.

Shubert Will Reopen With "Street Singer"

The Shubert will reopen on Monday night with the musical comedy, "Street Singer." This will be an American premiere of one of the most successful attractions in London last season, where J. J. Shubert saw it and decided it was worthy of an American presentation.

FINE SHOW AT THE 'MET'

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

THE Father of Waters might never recognize himself as "The River of Romance," even when it is so finely pictured as in the feature film at the Metropolitan. But history tells us the old Mississippi had its romantic hale, so that we can well drink all the golden glory that "Buddy" Rogers and his aides and notably Director Richard Wallace, pour in, and around, this talking picture. But there is a heavy countenance of Simon Legree, stuff, deep-dyed villainy afore, all of which paves the way whereon Wallace Beery steps along so ably as to "steal the show" so far as acting honors go. But of course, the feminine applause will be almost all for the handsome young Mr. Rogers, never handsomer, never more romantic than here.

June Collyer

Mr. Rogers meets all the demands of the wobshippers of this matinee idol. Mr. Beery gives a superb characterization of a "gambling king," and is to be credited also with being the origin of most of the humor of the drama. Natalie Kingston is clever and Mary Brian is her usual sweet self. Harry B. Walthall, Fred Kohler, and June Collyer help along with their talents.

On stage, there is a tiptop show. Gene Rodemich, though less in evidence than may would wish, handles the presentation in his usual first-class fashion.

Schwab and Mandel Show Due in August

"Follow Thru," Schwab and Mandel's great musical comedy success, will open at the Majestic, August 12. A special company, including such well-known players as Bobby Jarvis, Beth Meakins and John Philbrick, will present this comedy of the golf links.

Troubadours Will Be at Nantasket Tonight

The Spana Troubadours will be at the Paragon Park Ballroom, Nantasket, tonight, in their first public New England appearance under the personal direction of Sam Lanin.

Pictures-Variety

GLOBE — "The Time, The Place, and The Girl," and "The Valiant," for four days; beginning, Thursday.

"A Dangerous Woman" and "The Glad Rag Doll."

BOWDOIN—"The Idle Rich" and "The Overland Telegraph"; also, "Unaccustomed as We Are." Other films, and vaudeville.

SMALL TOWN GIRL STAR

ABOUT every three months the little town of Sarnia, Ont., has another reason to give thanks to the movies. The reason is a new picture featuring Marie Prevost, a native daughter. At the same time the city of Denver, Col., takes a bow because it was there that Marie passed several years of her childhood.

Sarnia and Denver will have another chance to cheer as William Boyd's new all-talking air thriller, "The Flying Fool," is shown at the Keith-Albee and Marie plays the feminine lead.

MUTES ON TALKIES BY FOX

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS,

LOS ANGELES, July 27.—The Fox Company is making silent versions of "Old Arizona," "Speakeasy," "The Cockeyed World," "Behind That Curtain," and all their other recent talkies.

Now don't get excited and put down this heroic move to the failure of sound films. That's not the case at all. It is merely an effort on the part of William Fox to give the 6000 theaters in this country and the 20,000 theaters abroad a chance to have entertainment for their patrons. There are fully that many houses not equipped with sound apparatus.

It may interest the readers of this column to know that today only 4000 theaters are equipped with facilities talking movies. [illegible] estimated that there will be [illegible] theaters ready for sound and at the end of 1930, 10,000 theaters will be able to present talkies.

In the meantime what are the small houses to do for good pictures? That's the problem that William Fox is trying to help the exhibitors solve by giving them good silent attractions.

"Old Arizona," "The Cockeyed World," etc., will be re-made into silent versions as they are, with the necessary titles and scenes added to take the place of dialogue.

BETTY COMPSON can play the role in "Woman to Woman" she played seven years ago and look just as young and blooming as she did then. That's a compliment not many men or women merit in this here life of ours. Miss Compson has been signed by Tiffany Stahl for the Victor Saville Production. The company due to make a talking version of "Woman to Woman," George Bancud draws the part Clive Brook played with such finesse and Juliette Compton has been signed for the other important role. Miss Compton is said to be a sister of Fay, who played opposite Adolphe Menjou in "Fashions of Love."

SNAPSHOTS of Hollywood collected at random: Ann Pennington being mistaken for Clara Bow when she entered the United Artist Theater at the "Four Feathers" premiere. Fannie Brice, not to be outdone, said that somebody pointed her out as Mary Pickford. Louise Groody dancing in the Roosevelt Blossom Room with Ben Gimbel, Hoot Gibson entertaining in honor of Art Goebel in the Blossom Room, a cake with an airplane as one of the favors. Bebe Daniels at the Gibson party, also Ruth Elder, also Sally Rilleru in a pale blue evening dress. Laura LaPlante with disguising black glasses dining at the Roosevelt with her husband, William Seiter. Clarence Brown sitting at a derby table. Anita Stewart being showered with rice as she departed for her honeymoon from the Villa Carlotta. That's all today.

LISTENING IN

By THE RADIO EDITOR

EMELIA DA PRATO, the young lyric soprano of San Francisco who won second place in the National Radio Audition of 1927, is to be the guest artist of the Atwater Kent Radio Hour tomorrow evening on WEEI at 9 15 p. m. just before returning to the Pacific Coast after two years of intensive study for an operatic career. Opera has always been her ambition and through her school days and her days of routine work as a stenographer in a lumber yard, she continued to sing and to study.

Vincent Lopez, one of the best known radio dance leaders, will celebrate two important events in his musical life next week. One will be the anniversary of his first piano recital, given when he was six years old and the other will be the eighth anniversary of his radio debut. As a feature of his broadcast with the Kleetroneers orchestra, next Thursday night at 7.30 o'clock through the NBC system, he will play one of the selections he used at his first piano recital and the first selection he played for a radio audience. The number that he used in his childhood recital is "Impatience" and the initial number he played for the air is "Anita's Dance" from "Peer Gynt Suite."

New York's official welcome to Roger Q. Williams and James A. Yancey, aviators who spanned the Atlantic to the Spanish coast on an attempted non-stop flight to Rome recently and their reprieve, will be heard at noon, Monday through the National Broadcasting Co. System. The broadcast is expected to begin about 12.30 o'clock, and continue for approximately one hour. It will be picked up from the reception room at the City Hall, where Mayor Walker will greet the fliers when they are presented by Police Commissioner Grover A. Whalen.

The program will be offered to a coast-to-coast network of NBC stations with WJZ as the New York outlet.

There are not lacking in State street those who look for a not distant dividend increase on this issue. Millions have been added to surplus in the first half of the prosperous 1929. Below is New Haven's monthly report, made public today, of revenues and expenses for the month of June 1929 and the six months ended June 30, 1929.

Business men in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont secured $3,093,-700 worth of export business in the period July 1, 1928-June 30, 1929, as a result of specific services rendered them by the worldwide organization of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, according to an announcement made today by Harvey A. Sweetser, manager of the Boston office of the bureau.

This record figure, based upon estimates furnished by the firms served, far exceeded that reported by clients of the Boston office in any previous year. The business was distributed among 145 different concerns, who established through the bureau a total of 614 connections in virtually every market in the world. In addition 43 firms reported savings totaling $102,000 which resulted from active aid of the Department of Commerce representatives in various foreign marketing areas.

The Boston office is essentially the initial point of contact between manufacturers in the New England States, exclusive of Connecticut, a territory which because of the factor of proximity is served by the New York district office, and the Commerce Department organization in Washington and abroad. Its distributive service to manufacturers having exportable products has never been so intensive. Over 50 per cent of the clients of the office reporting new export business attributable to the bureau in the past 12 months took advantage of its services but very recently.

Any firm of American identity desiring to seek markets for their products in foreign markets is entitled to make use of the department of commerce organization for the promotion of American foreign trade. Firms in New England are served by the Boston office personnel by a staff of experienced men who have served in foreign countries as trade investigators to further the interests of American business.

General Electric Co abolishes its risks of payroll holdups by inaugurating payroll checks. The action was originally suggested in this column a number of years ago. Thousands of holdups would have found the check payment system satisfactory.

The number of automobiles in operation in the United States is estimated at 23,000,000. With the mileage of the "average car" 11,000 miles, the distance covered annual ly by all these cars would be 253 billions of miles. This is many times the distance proposed to be traveled by the "moon rocket" of Dr. Robert H Goddard, celebrated Clark University inventor.

* * *

This recalls that Italy recently decorated an inventor for designing a moon rocket still in the experimental stage Dr Goddard's invention, many years old, in this country leads to a visit by a State fire inspector.

Merger Outlook vs. Earnings as Guide to Value of Stocks

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER

NEW YORK, July 27.—The slogan of the recent bull swing of stock prices has been the ancient adage, "In union there is strength."

Mergers under way and in prospect have stirred the speculative imagination anew. The mere word —mergers—has become its own capture with. Unquestionably some of the well advanced consolidations will result in operating economies, which will justify an optimistic appraisal of the shares of the component companies. But the history of American business has demonstrated that all mergers are not necessarily successful. Many have disappointed the promoters.

The real test of the value of mergers, from the standpoint of stockholders, is their effect on earning power. The prudent investor should never lose sight of this fact. The soundness of market operations becomes questionable when security buyers put more emphasis on merger prospects than on earning power past, present and prospective.

The new holding companies which have been set up in the public utility and railroad fields and independent investment trusts have been, with other institutional buyers, including the fire and casualty insurance companies, principal buyers of public utility and railroad shares. That type of massed buying has decreased the floating supply of such stocks, and has been responsible for the price rise. Accordingly, it must be recognized that a primary reason behind the upswing has been technical changes in capital structures of various corporations rather than any radical change in earning power.

Wall Street also continues to worship Einstein's doctrine of relativity. After one set of stocks rises others in the same class are pushed up because they are cheap in relation to the former. Stock prices are little more than a series of relatives.

The present is a golden age in American business, with marked improvement in the technique of managers and in the genius of inventors. The rapid application of science to business puts trade on a more solid basis.

In view of the multiplicity of new products, one wonders whether the present generation is wiser than its predecessors. Each generation likes to think that it is.

In reality this generation is cashing in on the heritage from the past, getting the benefit of the cumulative effect of inventions through the centuries.

The Cadillac Motor Car Co., in a singularly thoughtful advertisement, paying homage to the past, very properly points out that we can thank certain ancients for many of our mechanical marvels, including motor cars.

"We are inclined to think of motor cars, radios, phonographs and motion pictures as modern inventions," the company says. "And they are to a large degree. But they could not have been invented had not many fundamental laws in mechanics, engineering and electricity been established long before these devices were ever thought of.

"Motor cars are tremendously indebted to the past. Consider, for example, just the transmission.

"Many people, not mechanically inclined, would probably say it was like a box of gears. So it is, and gears remind us of something we had almost forgotten. It is generally taught when we study elementary physics. It is these:

"Every machine can be reduced to a few simple elements, called by the Mechanical Powers. The primary ones are the lever, inclined plans and pulley. The others, derived therefrom, are the wedge and axle (derived from the lever), the wedge and the screw (derived from the inclined plane).

"We are indebted to Archimedes, Galileo, Leonardo Da Vinci, Stevinus, Newton and other eminent mathematicians and scientists of the past for formulating the principles of the Six Mechanical Powers and developing their application so that we can use them today in our numerous machines in ways the ancients never dreamed of."

The willingness of an advertiser to step aside for a moment from the pursuit of profits to doff his hat to scientists is a notable gesture. It is a reversal of the usual testimonial copy, and a happy relief.

Hope for one of the laggard trades has been expressed by Theodore H. Price, editor of Commerce and Finance, who has a wide practical and theoretical knowledge of cotton. "In so far as the cotton goods market is concerned," Mr. Price pointed out, "it is doing about as well as may be expected under the circumstances. Trade could be increasing at least a point in two days, it is not expected that either spinners or distributors will commit themselves heavily, and a hand-to-mouth policy still persists.

"In short there should be assurance of a fair yield at a reasonable price, next season's cotton goods trade ought to be prosperous. Retail trade is excellent and the industries of cotton are increasing no rapidly that it is fair to assume that consumption is permanently established at above 15,000,000 bales of American yearly when ever the cotton can be obtained at a price that consumers will pay."

Views of Wall Street

Holding Company's Utility List

AMERICAN EUROPEAN SECURITY CO. a recent newcomer to the Big Board, has an attractive investment list of public utility stocks. Enhancement in value of these investments has been enjoyed in recent months as a result of the performance of leading public utility stocks. Also, the European's common stock has an actual liquidating value closer to the current price of the shares than probably any other similar enterprise. Behind a $4,000,000 funded debt and $5,000,000 preferred stock, there are 375,000 shares of common stock, most of which is understood to be owned by interests identified with the management and by people in the public utility and electrical industries.

Responsible people are authority for the statement that a further correction would do no harm to the market.

Pennsylvania's Income Betterment

CONTINUED demand for Pennsylvania Railroad stock was inspired by the fine showing disclosed in the half-year income account. Net-per-share equalled $4.27 a share, against $2.96 in the same period of 1928. The report strengthened the opinion that $9 a share for the full year is within reach. The Pennsylvania probably will offer valuable subscription rights to its stockholders in connection with its ambitious electrification program.

American Can to Pay Stock Bonus

MAINTAINED enthusiasm for American Can in leading financial circles is attributed to expectation that stockholders will receive another bonus within the next year. It is understood that directors have under consideration the payment of a stock dividend, but that official action may not be taken until the early part of next year, when the returns for the full year 1929 will be known.

Estimate is made that Raybestos Manhattan will earn 56 a share this year.

American Rolling Mills Earnings

SCIENTIFIC interests who have investigated American Rolling Mills' process are reported to be favorable in its prospects. The earnings reports of the company may not reflect the income to be derived from the leasing of this process for perhaps several months, however. Next year, however, it is expected that an improvement in profits will be witnessed.

This Day in Our History

ON July 27, 1912, the United States settled a long standing dispute with Mexico in regard to 550 acres of land in El Paso, Tex. The United States paid Mexico about $1,000,000 for the land. Acquisition of other territory by purchase has cost the nation much, but has proved of immense value.

"ALL QUIET on the WESTERN FRONT," by ERICH MARIA REMARQUE

CHAPTER 12

THE night is unbearable. We cannot sleep, but stare ahead of us and doze. Tjaden regrets that we wasted the gnawed pieces of bread on the rats. We would gladly have them again to eat now. We are short of water, too, but not seriously yet.

Towards morning, while it is still dark, there is some excitement. Through the entrance rushes in a swarm of fleeing rats that try to storm the walls. Torches light up the confusion. Everyone yells and curses and slaughters. The madness and despair of many hours unloads itself in this outburst. Faces are distorted, arms strike out, the beasts scream; we just stop in time to avoid attacking one another.

The onslaught has exhausted us. We lie down to wait again. It is a marvel that our post has had no casualties so far. It is one of the few deep dugouts.

A corporal creeps in; he has a loaf of bread with him. Three people have had the luck to get through during the night and bring some provisions. They say the bombardment extends undiminished as far as the artillery lines. It is a mystery where the enemy gets all his shells.

We wait and wait. By midday what I expected happens. One of the recruits has a fit. I have been watching him for a long time, grinding his teeth and opening and shutting his fists. These hunted, protruding eyes, we know them too well. During the last few hours he has had merely the appearance of calm. He had collapsed like a rotten tree.

Now he stands up, stealthily creeps across the floor, hesitates a moment and then glides towards the door. I intercept him and say: "Where are you going?"

"I'll be back in a minute," says he, and tries to push me.

"Wait a bit, the shelling will stop soon."

Recruit Goes Mad

He listens and for a moment his eye becomes clear. Then again he has the glowering eyes of a mad dog, he is silent, he shoves me aside.

"One minute, lad," I say. Kat notices. Just as the recruit shakes me off Kat jumps in and we hold him.

Then he begins to rave: "Leave me alone, let me go out, I will go out!"

He won't listen to anything and hits out, his mouth is wet and pours out words, half choked, meaningless words. It is a case of claustrophobia, he feels as though he is suffocating here and wants to get out at any price. If we let him go he would run about everywhere regardless of cover. He is not the first.

Though he raves and eyes roll, it can't be helped, and we have to give him a hiding to bring him to his senses. We do it quickly and mercilessly, and at last he sits down quietly. The others have turned pale; let's hope it deters them. This bombardment is too much for the poor devils, they have been sent straight from a recruiting-depot into a barrage that is enough to turn an old soldier's hair gray.

After this affair the sticky, close atmosphere works more than ever on our nerves. We sit as if in our graves waiting only to be closed in.

Suddenly it howls and flashes terrifically, the dugout cracks in all its joints under a direct hit, fortunately only a light one that the concrete blocks are able to withstand. It rings metallically, the walls reel, rifles, helmets, earth, mud and dust fly everywhere. Sulphur fumes pour in.

If we were in one of those light dug-outs that they have been building lately instead of this deep one, not one of us would now be alive.

Wait Explosions

But the effect is bad enough even so. The recruit starts to rave again and two others follow suit. One jumps up and rushes out, we have trouble with the other two. I start after the one who escapes and wonder whether to shoot him in the leg—then it shrieks again, I fling myself down and when I stand up the wall of the trench is plastered with smoking splinters, lumps of flesh and bits of uniform. I scramble back.

The first recruit seems actually to have gone insane. He butts his head against the wall like a goat. We must try tonight to take him to the rear. Meanwhile we bind him, but in such a way that in case of attack he can be released at once.

Kat suggests a game of skat; it is easier when a man has something to do. But it is no use, we listen for every explosion that comes close, miscount the tricks, and fail to follow suit. We have to give it up. We sit as though in a hissing boiler that is being belabored from without on all sides.

Night again. We are deadened by the strain—a deadly tension that scrapes along one's spine like a gapped knife. Our legs refuse to move, our hands tremble, our bodies are a thin skin stretched painfully over repressed madness, over an almost irresistible, bursting roar. We have neither flesh nor muscles any longer, we dare not look at one another for fear of some incalculable thing. So we shut our teeth—it will end—it will end—perhaps we will come through.

Suddenly the nearer explosions cease. The shelling continues but it has lifted and falls behind us, our trench is free. We seize the hand-grenades, pitch them out in front of the dugout and jump after them. The bombardment has stopped and a heavy barrage now falls behind us. The attack has come.

No one would believe that in this howling waste there could still be men; but steel helmets now appear on all sides of the trench, and 50 yards from us a machine-gun is already in position and barking.

The wire-entanglements are torn to pieces. Yet they offer some obstacle. We see the storm-troops coming. Our artillery opens fire. Machine-guns rattle, rifles crack. The charge works its way across. Hale and Kropp begin with the hand-grenades. They throw as fast as they can, others pass them, the handles with the strings already pulled. Hale throws 75 yards, Kropp 60, it has been measured, the distance is important. The enemy as they run cannot do much before they are within 40 yards.

We recognize the distorted faces, the smooth helmets; they are French. They have already suffered heavily when they reach the remnants of the barbed-wire entanglements. A whole line has gone down before our machine-guns; then we have a lot of stoppages and they come nearer.

Throws Grenade

I see one of them, his face upturned, fall into a wire cradle. His body collapses, his hands remain suspended as though he were praying. Then his body with the stumps of his arms, shot off, now hang in the wire.

The moment we are about to retreat three faces rise up from the ground in front of us. Under one of the helmets a dark pointed beard and two eyes that are fastened on me. I raise my hand but I cannot throw into those strange eyes; for one mad moment the whole slaughter whirls like a circus round me, and these two eyes that are alone motionless; then the head rises up, a hand, a movement, and my hand-grenade flies through the air and into him.

We make for the rear, pull wire cradles into the trench and leave bombs behind us with the string pulled, which ensure us a fiery retreat. The machine-guns are already firing from the next position.

We hays become wild beasts. We do not fight, we defend ourselves against annihilation.

It is not against men that we fling our bombs, what do we know of men in this moment when Death with hands and helmets is hunting us down—now, for the first time in three days we can see his face, now, for the first time in three days we can oppose him; we feel a mad anger. No longer do we lie helpless, waiting on the scaffold, we can destroy and kill, to save ourselves, to save ourselves and be revenged.

Hurl Explosives

We crouch behind every corner, behind every barrier of barbed-wire, and hurl heaps of explosives at the feet of the advancing enemy before we run. The blast of the hand-grenades impinges powerfully on our arms and legs; crouching like cats we run on, overwhelmed by this wave that bears us along, that fills us with ferocity, turning us into things, into murderers, into God only knows what devils; this wave that multiplies our strength with fear and madness and greed of life, seeking and fighting for nothing but our deliverance. If your own father came over with them you would not hesitate to fling a bomb into him.

The forward trenches have been abandoned. Are they still trenches? They are blown to pieces, annihilated — there are only broken lines of funnels, holes linked by tracks, nests of craters, that is all. But the enemy's casualties increase. They did not count on so much resistance.

FOREST LOVE by Hazel Livingston

CHAPTER 32

THE Beamers' red brick house on Jackson st. was deserted most of the year. Jack preferred to stay at a club, and Anita hated the place she had furnished so happily 12 years ago. A bride then, just married to a handsome young Englishman, ready to live happily ever after. . . .

But it had a certain fascination for her. She kept two servants in it always, and there had been times when she dreamed of making it a real home again. But not any more. She was forty-seven and looked it. Jack was thirty-four.

She had come back to it now because she was lonely. Her trip to visit her sister-in-law in Reno had been a dismal failure. Reno was too gay. She could not dance and drink cocktails every night like the others. She was not strong enough.

She went when she let herself think of her poor health. It was because of that that Jack had worried her so soon. If she had been able to ride the spirited, active horses he liked so well, to play golf and to swim, it might have made a difference. But the doctors told her she was fortunate to be able to get around at all. She was practically an invalid.

She unloosed her dead, brittle hair—it didn't take the color very well any more—and rubbed cold cream into her face. Perhaps the new plastic surgery . . . but she shuddered just thinking of it. She wasn't very brave.

She was just getting into bed when she heard the latch key in the door downstairs, and then the sound of Maxwell hurrying. "Oh, it's you, sir . . . Glad to see you, sir. . . . Quite a stranger, if I may say so!"

Jack! Nervous hands flew to her greasy, cold-creamed face. Why was he here? What did he want? . . . But whatever it was, it wasn't to see her. She knew that. She sighed and turned off the light.

She was just drooping off to sleep when there came a pounding at her door.

Before she could answer it was flung open, and the light switched on. "This is a hell of a fine surprise!" her husband said, glaring at her from the doorway. "I thought you were in Reno. My God, what does this mean? Did you change your mind?"

"I don't know what you mean," she faltered.

"Yes you do! We talked this all over. You agreed to go to Reno—"

"To visit Andee—that was all! I never said—"

"You did. You agreed to get a divorce. You did! Don't lie to me! And for God's sake stop blubbering. As if that grease you've got all over yourself won't turn a man sick without . . . shut up! Don't talk when I'm talking! I said you went to Reno to get a divorce. Now you're back. Under the same roof with me. A fine situation. How does that look? I suppose you lose your Reno residence at the same time. Here I come home after a pleasant evening, feeling right on top of the world, and find out YOU'RE HERE! Damned embarrassing for me . . . suppose I'd brought someone home with me . . . how would it look—" He was thinking of Nancy. He'd tried hard enough to get her to come in and sample Anita's old Madeira . . . good thing she insisted on going straight home . . . just shows that everything works out for the best . . . except Anita . . . damn her, always gumming up the machinery, ruining his life. . . .

"You were with her, Jack?" Anita's voice quivering.

"What's that?"

"You were with this girl you want to marry?"

"Well, what of it? Suppose I was. What's it to you?"

"Nothing," she said, between sobs. "Nothing. Have I ever tried to interfere?"

"You'd jolly well better not! Do I interfere with you?"

"No, Jack . . . don't you see? We understand each other. There's no need for divorce, dear. We needn't divorce each other; we can go on just as we are. . . ."

"Go on as we are? What do you think I am? A stuffed shirt? I want a real marriage—life, youth—love. I'm young—I'm human—I want—"

"Jack—please!"

"And, by God, I'm going to have it. If you won't get it, I will. I'll show you—"

"All right. Go ahead." Anita Beamer stopped crying. She slayed her trump card. "Go ahead if you want to. Jack, but you're fooling if you do. I've never put anything in your name. The ranches, the horses, this house, even the cars are mine. I'll stop your allowance. I've supported you for 12 long years, Jack Beamer, and I've been an indulgent fool. But I haven't been fool enough to let you get your hands on anything. Now go. I won't talk any more. I'm tired. Sick and tired of you!"

She pointed to the door. For all her greasy cheeks, her pink nose and her wispy, peroxide hair she achieved a certain dignity.

He stood a moment, gaping. Perhaps he respected her for the first time in all their married life. Then he went out quietly, closing the door.

• • •

Roger's wire came on Sunday. "It will be impossible meet you Saturday — stop — Letter follows. Roger."

Delayed in transit, somehow, of course.

But Nancy, who had waited for it minute by minute, who had imagined a thousand catastrophies, worried for him, cried over him, and for him, failing her, found it cold comfort when it came.

She read the ten words over quickly, and stuffed the crackling yellow sheet into her dress. She no longer cared that he had not come. She wasn't even curious to find the cause of the delay.

"I'm through!" she whispered to herself, over and over. Her head ached, her eyes were red with weeping.

When the letter came at last she stared at the envelope a long time before she opened it. When she had read it, she tore it into tiny pieces and threw them into the fire. She did not read between the lines, nor sense the loneliness and the fierce, wounded pride that had kept him from coming. She only knew that he had failed her. That she had waited in vain for him, and Jack Beamer had saved the day.

P. was a mistake . . . she should never have married Roger, . . . Jack was right; he didn't even want her now . . .

Thank heaven no one knew . . . slow, painful crimson flooded her face, her neck her ears . . . those first wildly happy days . . . she must have been insane.

When Jack Beamer and Nancy Hollenbeck met again there was a new tenseness in their bearing. A secret undercurrent of excitement. Things couldn't go on like this; there would have to be a change . . . .

"There'll be some little delay about our marriage," he said, watching her closely out of his shrewd gray eyes. "Anita found out I wanted that divorce pretty bad, so she decided to make me wait. I'd get it myself, but it's hardly the thing. That is, I'd rather let her save her face by seeming to get rid of me. At least I'll give her the chance to be reasonable, if you'll be patient, dear. It all depends on you. Say the word, and I'll fly to Reno tonight—"

"No—there's no reason for rush. We can wait," Nancy said uncomfortably. She was thinking of her own freedom. She must get it some way, and without any money . . .

She had sent Roger's crisp twenties back to him.

"And we had better not meet much in public, baby. God knows I've never been one to worry about conventions, but I'm thinking of you. We don't want Anita to get on to it—"

"All right," she said wearily. She'd miss Jack . . . his car . . . his company.

"How about dinner at Pierre's tomorrow night?"

"Will you just said—"

"On the Q. T., I mean. No one will see us. I'll have Pierre save a booth. You go in alone and ask for Pierre, I'll see him in the meanwhile. Seven-fifteen tomorrow. And a little run in the car afterwards. What do you say?"

"All right." She smiled, but there was no mirth in the smile. Walking home in the late afternoon sun she almost envied Lou, who had no love affairs to worry about.

Louise met her at the door.

"HOW—what a day she's had! she wailed at sight of Lou's flushed and worried face.

Lou put her finger to her lips. "Shh! PLENTY!"

With this prestige goes the duty of being foremost in the world of style.

This dipping side hem of the slender skirt with perfectly charming flat tiers, adds dignity, grace and length to the silhouette in the style No. 8128 I'm showing today. The belt is placed at slightly raised waistline and conceals seam that joins skirt and bodice of this attractive slip-on model.

The surplice fronts of bodice with attached jabot frill, are trimmed with applied bands.

It is very wearable interpreted in gay polka-dotted crepe de chine in white and green for town or resort.

You'll adore it and the small cost will amaze you. It is designed in sizes 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46-inch bust, and takes but 3¼ yds. of 39-inch material with ⅝ yd. of 35-inch contrasting to copy it exactly in the medium size.

It is decidedly formal in flowered chiffon, and an excellent choice for summer wardrobe.

Black chiffon is chic for matron for dinner wear.

Charteuse green handkerchief linen is enchantingly lovely, for it is so exquisitely fine and dainty, and ultra-new idea this season.

Adam and Eve -:- Story of Daring Rescue By Jack Woodford

THE girl furtively descended the steps from the top deck of the ferry, walked around behind an automobile parked upon the poop deck, and glancing around to make sure nobody was looking, slipped off into the water without a splash.

The backwash from the propellor caught her and whirled her around dizzyingly. Strangling, she fought frantically. Presently she felt herself grasped. There was a moment of complete unconsciousness and then she awoke, still in the water, but supported firmly.

"I guess nobody saw either one of us go off," her rescuer said ruefully, as he held her down to her chin in the water, to make the water support as much as possible of her weight, while he treaded water to support them both. "Figured somebody'd see me, sure. Dived from the top deck."

"Why did you do it?" she got out. "I intended to kill myself."

"Why did I do it, indeed?" he asked himself as much as her. "Just impulsive and a trifle nutty I guess. Lord, I hope another ferry or something comes along pretty soon. I can't keep treading down in the water and, with his mouth even with the surface let out a bellow that resounded loudly along the water. But there were no boats there. Far away on one side they could see the twinkling lights of the Jersey shore; behind them was the blazing shore line of Manhattan.

"You'd better," she said, "let me go, and swim for your life."

"Nothing doing," he said "I started this, I'll finish it. I can swim almost indefinitely—that is, I could if it weren't for these clothes. Hold very still, I'm going to take some of them off." Holding her with one hand he managed to slip out of his trousers. His Oxfords he kicked off. Holding her with the other hand he got rid of his coat, then his vest, tore off his shirt.

"There, that's better; feel like a fish," he reported. "Now, I'm sorry, but you'll have to get rid of some of your excess baggage, or you'll drown me, because I'm determined to get out of this or sink with you, so that's that."

Tearing and pulling he managed to help her out of most of her clothing. "Now," he directed, "lie perfectly still. Don't move a muscle. I'm going to start for the shore." With one hand beneath her shoulder he started swimming on his side, with his one free hand.

It was slow work. Several times ferries passed them, but he was afraid to swim toward the big awkward boats for fear of getting caught in their propellers, and nobody heard their shouts. At last he said:

"Listen, I've got to get a complete rest for a few minutes. If you lie utterly still upon the water, with just your mouth and nose above water, you'll float. Keep your lungs full of air, breathe it out and take it in in quick gasps, your mouth and nose won't go under water so long as your lungs are kept full, and if you take the gasps quickly enough you won't have time to sink in between them. Try it now."

She tried it and was successful. Her body lay in the water, feet downward, neck bent back, face a little above the water.

"You've got good nerves," he told her, after they had thus rested for twenty minutes; "usually takes people a long time to learn the dead man's float. Now come on, we'll let 'er flicker again." For half an hour he swam with her toward the Jersey shore, which was nearest. Finally he said:

"Try kicking your feet a little to help me. Kick them straight out, then bring them together like scissors." She accomplished it successfully and increased their speed a bit. Then he showed her how to stroke with the arms. They took another twenty minutes rest doing the dead man's float.

"You've got wonderful nerve," he told her admiringly, as they started to swim again. "Used to be a beach life guard, during my vacation from college. Taught many a girl to swim; but never found one could learn as fast as you. She thrilled to his praise. She couldn't see him yet, but she liked his voice tremendously. At last she reported regretfully.

"I'm all in."

"Me, too," he admitted. "Looks bad. You'll have to slip out of the rest of your clothes, and I will, too. It's our only chance. They hold us back and tire us." They both managed the job somehow, then a full half hour of dead man's float. A little refreshed they started out again. She was swimming easy enough now, with the double overhand he had taught her. This time they could see each other with the faint blush of dawn peeping over the horizon. A ferryboat suddenly stopped in its course, tooted frantically and started toward them. The tabloid papers the following morning said:

"Adam and Eve, who were picked out by a colonel this morning, would give no explanation of their strange presence there, other than that they just wanted to get acquainted. It is thought that they pulled another publicity stunt. If so they were successful.

"A moving picture theatre is going to feature their wedding in bathing suits. Both of them, it is reported, were out of work—but they're not any more. The Eureka circuit has booked them for 20 weeks at a reputed salary of $1000 per week each."

THESE CHURCHES ARE OPEN ALL SUMMER

First St. Theresa Church

Fr. James E. Rogers, pastor of the parish of St. Theresa, Watertown, looks forward to one of the most beautiful churches in Greater Boston when the structure on the corner of School and Mt. Vernon sts. is completed. By early fall the basement or vestry will be ready for use, and there the services will be held until more money has been raised for the upper auditorium. This is the first Greater Boston parish to bear the name of St. Theresa, "The Little Flower," sainted but a few years ago.

The steamer M. J. Perkins will leave Eastern avenue dock at 10:30 a. m. and 1:30 p. m. Many attractive features have been arranged for including games and sports and an enjoyable time is promised to all. Warren F. McDonald is chairman of the general arrangements, assisted by the various committees.

The Sunday afternoon open-air services on the Charles Street Mall of the Common will have an unusual feature tomorrow in the singing accompanied by cornets, contributed by the young people of the First Baptist Church, Melrose. The preachers will be Rev. Joseph R. Newton, Church of the Disciples, Everett; Rev. Walter E. Woodbury, D.D., First Baptist Church, Melrose, and Rev. Wolcott Cutler, St. John's Episcopal Church, Charlestown, who will have charge of the services.

At the Old Cambridge Baptist Church near Harvard sq. union services of several of the Old Cambridge churches will be held tomorrow. This church will be open for these meetings August 4 and 11. The public is cordially welcomed.

The Rev. Ralph H. Rogers will preach at the Harvard Congregational Church, in the absence of Dr. Ashley Day Leavitt. Baptists and Methodists have joined with the Congregationalists for the summer.

Monday, July 29, is the feast of St. Martha, Virgin, the sister of St. Mary Magdalen. Her life was devoted to the service of the Saviour. When the storm of persecution broke, it is alleged, her family, with a few friends, were put into a boat without oars or sail and borne to the coast of France.

The Rev. A. Juland Hughes, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Everett, will welcome churchgoers to his church for a series of three sermons, July 28, August 4 and 11. There is to be special music. Next Friday evening there will be a devotional service, also in the Baptist Church.

The Rev. Robert W. McLaughlin of the Piedmont Congregational Church, Worcester, occupies the pulpit of the Old South Church, Boylston and Dartmouth sts., tomorrow morning.

The Blaney Memorial Baptist Church of Dorchester will open its doors tomorrow to be host for the next three Sundays for union meetings of the Methodist, Congregational and Baptist Churches. The Rev. Eugene D. Doloff will preach.

The Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson will be host for the last time tomorrow morning at the Meeting House Hill Unitarian Church for the summer union congregations, including the Congregationalists, Baptists and Methodists.

Friday, August 2, is the feast of St. Stephen, pope and martyr. He succeeded St. Lucius as the supreme head of the church in 253. In 257 while seated in his pontifical chair, he was beheaded by the satellites of the emperor.

The Rev. Charles Lyon Seasholes, of the Baptist Church, Watertown, begins a series of three sermons for the union meetings to be held in his church tomorrow morning and August 4 and August 11. Soloists will be Mrs. Helen Jackson Courtenay and Mr. Earle Grant Clement.

Churchgoers of Newton Center will move from the Methodist church, where they have gone for the last three Sundays, and begin morning worship at the Baptist church tomorrow morning. The Rev. Luther W. Smith of Columbia, Mo., will be the preacher.

A resolution condemning the proposal for a Federal Department of Education was adopted by the Ancient Order of Hibernians at the 56th annual national convention which closed at Minneapolis today. "Freedom of education is a vital principle in a democracy," says the resolution, "and we trust that this principle will not be impaired by the relegation of local powers to federal authority."

The Rev. Albert H. Gage, D.D., from Scranton, Pa., will be the preacher tomorrow at the Dudley St. Singing Baptist Church. Special music and singing are notable additions at this church.

The Rev. Harold Niles of the Universalist Church, Denver, Col., will be the preacher for the union meeting in Lynn tomorrow, where the Unitarian, Universalist and Congregational Churches join for the summer.

"Truth" will be the subject of the lesson-sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow.

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The power of God brings deliverance to the captive. . . . What is it that binds men with heavier shackles to sin, sickness and death? Whatever enslaves man is opposed to the divine government, which makes man free." (Pp. 224, 225.) Sunday services at 10:45 a. m.

In historic Lexington tomorrow the Church of Our Redeemer will be host to the members of the First Parish Church. Follen Church, First Baptist and the Hancock Congregational Church at a union service held at 11 a. m. Visitors are cordially invited.

The Unitarian Church of Melrose will be host to various congregations tomorrow, and the Rev. G. H. Leining will preach. A union Sunday School will also meet during church time. Those who desire pastoral care are asked during the summer to telephone Melrose 2413. Church office hours 10 to 12 daily.

Friends are congratulating Rev. and Mrs. Edward Allen Morris of the Orthodox Congregational Church, Arlington, on the birth of a daughter, Janice Ann, at the parsonage, 11 Maple st., on July 15. This is the first child to be born at the parsonage in at least thirty-eight years.

Meetings conducted in the small grove adjoining the First Free Baptist Church, Warren st., Roxbury, will continue another week, with services every night except Monday and Saturday. The Gospel Lighthouse Tent Association sponsors the meetings. The speaker, Rev. F. S. Bernaerts, will present timely evangelical topics of general interest. The music and the attractive location combine to create a delightful social and religious atmosphere. The subject, Sunday night, will be "Death, Eternal Life, and Immortality—What Are They?" The closing service is announced for Sunday night, August 4. All cars running on Warren st. to and from the Dudley "L" terminal pass the location. In event of unfavorable weather the meetings are held in the church.

NATURE OF GOD TROUBLING LIBERALS

Among liberal churches today there is much discussion as to the "Nature of God." Religious journals, such as the Christian Century, Zion's Herald, the Christian Reader and the Christian Register, have been discussing "Humanism," and have tried to analyze the relation between science and religion. Prof. Eddington, a great physicist of England, has written a book recently and made public statements that science once it agrees that there is no solid matter, but that all substance is made up of electrons spinning about in small universes, will finally come to a spiritual interpretation which will appreciate what some theologians have maintained to be the nature of God. Most of the religious editors refuse to let modernism, humanism or science take from them a fundamental conception of a ruling power they prefer to call God the Father.

FIVE YOUTHFUL EVANGELISTS

An evangelistic group of unique character comes to Boston tomorrow for a three days' engagement. It consists of five young men, all students at Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill. When the college closed last June, they started on an automobile trip through the Middle West, holding revival meetings here and there. This being their idea of a summer vacation it turned out to be no idle pleasure trip. They have regularly conducted one to four meetings each day, Sundays included, and thus far have visited a dozen states and covered many thousand miles.

The quintet includes a forceful speaker, Rev. Percy Crawford, who although still a student is an ordained preacher, and a quartet of singers, one of whom doubles on the saxophone and another on the English trumpet. They are Clarence Wyngarden, bass and trumpeter; Wilton Nelson, baritone and saxophonist; George Ferris, second tenor and soloist; Willard Price, first tenor and manager.

The initial meeting of the Greater Boston engagement will be held tomorrow morning at the First Church of Weymouth (Congregationalist), and the young men will have complete charge of the service. Tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'clock they will hold a service on Boston Common, under the auspices of the Evangelistic Association of New England, and in the evening they will conduct the service at the Clarendon Street Baptist Church, beginning at 7:30. On Monday evening at 8 o'clock they will be at the Union Rescue Mission, 1 Dover st., and on Tuesday evening at the Merrimac Mission, 107 Staniford st.

"Hitch Your Auto to a Star"

Sermon by Dr. Charles E. Carroll at Trinity Street Methodist Church tomorrow at 10:45. An open-air praise service will be conducted by the Trinity Concert st. entrance, led by the church trumpeter, Mr. Erwin Paddock, at 7 o'clock. The evening theme of the pastor will be "Some Signs of an Advancing Kingdom." The last of the fellowship meetings of the second Sunday evening in September will be held in the chapel at 8:30 to which all are cordially invited. The W. F. M. S. Founders room and museum will be open to visitors only on Sundays during August. The summer vacation of the pastor will include the Sundays in August and the first Sunday in September. Dr. Webster H. Powell will be the special preacher both morning and evening during these Sundays.

God Not a Father, Says Rev. Pomeroy

The Rev. Vivian T. Pomeroy, minister of the Unitarian Church of Milton, would drop the name Father as one not best calculated to describe God. The Milton pastor in an article printed in the Christian Leader writes:

"Obviously, to use the word 'father' with respect of God is to use a symbol; and this particular symbol has lost much of its power. It was a very powerful symbol in patriarchal or Puritan times, when the father was a superb and priestlike figure. But today, although no doubt fathers have improved, they are scarcely impressive in that old way. I should not say that the American father suggests a supreme being. He rather suggests a creature in a condition of spiritual subordination."

Journalism to Promote Truth, Justice

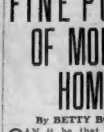
His Holiness, Pope Pius XI, recently received in audience the participants in the Study Congress of the Catholic Journalists held recently in Rome. At this audience, headed by the Directors and correspondents of the daily and weekly Catholic Journal, a number of well-known professional men, representatives of Catholic action and others were present with the Journalists. In his discourse on the occasion, the Holy Father points out the great efficiency of Journalism in promoting truth and justice.

FINE POINTS OF MODERN HOMES

By BETTY BONNELL

CAN it be that the year 1929, with its sudden swing toward "sun-tan" this and "sun-tan" that, will mark a return to the sun worshipping days of our ancestors of the remote past?

We know, of course, that the God of the Sun was the most revered of the deities to whom the shaggy-haired cave-man raised his arms and possibly his voice in supplication. Instinctively he knew that that miraculous ball of fire which rose every day in the east and set every day in the west, gave him light and kept his body warm. And our own American Indians prayed to the sun before their council campfires.



Betty Bonnell

Of late, science has awakened to that fact that our modern domestic life keeps us shut in and confined so much of the time that we lose much of the health-giving benefit that good old Sol cheerfully sends our way.

So they've gotten busy, thinking up new devices that bring the sun, or many of its qualities, right into the home where we can enjoy its real goodness.

Recently I picked up an interesting folder devoted to artificial sunbath equipment, which can be installed right in one's own bath or bedroom. It seems that more important, even, than the visible rays of the sun, are the invisible ultra-violet and infra-red rays which seem to do amazing things to one's vitality and resistance to disease. What with city smoke, indoor living and change of seasons, we lose a good deal of these elements.

I easily can see how much benefit one can derive from such bath equipment which produces through artificial means those highly important invisible rays that tone and stimulate the system.

Then, of course, there's that much talked-of wingless, which enables the ultra-violet rays of the sun to penetrate right into the room. You see, against ordinary glass, the sun can do no more than merely provide light, and its healthful properties are wasted as far as occupants of the room are concerned.

Hospitals and business organizations interested in efficiency of employes were the first to adopt vitaglass, but there has been a marked trend of late toward its adoption by householders. It seems to do wonders, especially for youngsters and convalescents.

Dutch Colonial Home Costing $11,200

Charming home, well arranged.

By National Modern Homes Bureau, Inc.

THIS Dutch Colonial home, A 121, is well arranged, comfort and economy being the leading factors in governing its creation.

The peaked gable over the little entrance porch is at once unusual and artistic and it alone lifts the house from the ordinary multitudinous Dutch Colonial that one sees everywhere.

Then there is the attached garage, no going out of doors to get at the car. One simply passes through the enclosed sun porch that connects the house and the garage. Not only that, but the house provides heat enough to keep the car from becoming too cold in the winter months.

One enters into a small vestibule and thence to the living room with its fireplace and the stairs leading up from the rear.

There is a double opening connecting living room and dining room which permits of very pleasing interior decoration. The kitchen, fully equipped and with a neat little breakfast alcove, is at the rear of the dining room.

The second floor provides three good bedrooms, generous hall, linen closet, tiled bath and ample wardrobes in each chamber.

The exterior of the house provides for a shingle roof in variegated shades of brown, wide cream-colored siding and blue-green shutters. Another thing that is worthy of note is the unusual cut-outs on the shutters —quaint little pots with growing flowers. There also is the artistic weather vane to give an added touch of charm.

This is, indeed, a home—substantial and plain, yet with an air of grace about it that is captivating.

Cost about $11,200.

COMPLETE working plans and specifications of the house illustrated above may be obtained for a nominal cost from the National Modern Homes Bureau, Inc. Any technical questions regarding this house will be answered without cost or obligation. AUGUST SALES OF FURS NEAR

Following the habit of recent years, feminine Boston is now turning its attention to winter wear and anxiously awaits the coming of the August Fur Sales.

The fact that these events are genuine sales in that they offer unusual values is one point of attraction, but equally important seems to be the style element. In the August sales are the first showings of models which will be featured throughout the season. The new furs are shown, and opportunity is presented to learn every tendency in skins, line and color.

For the season of 1929-30 style seems to be the most important note. A fur coat is no longer just a fur coat. Fashion is a vital factor. Fashion in style, fashion in kind, color and combinations of fur, fashion in linings, and exaltation in trimming and detail are all important, and are revealed for the first time in the August Sale showings.

This year, as in the past, the reputable merchants of the city have made extensive preparations for their August Fur Sales and will offer a wide variety of garments and scarfs, in all the popular furs as well as in the less expensive skins. Prices as a whole will remain moderate, and, in many cases, will show appreciable savings over other years.

Advance information from the wholesale furriers and style authorities indicates particular interest in coats embodying the Princess Flair, the Back Zip, and jaunty sport lines. Collars will include pointed, tap-over, roll and shirred lines. Bohemy collars and butterfly collars will continue in vogue.

Browns will be popular among the colors; and the same skins will be used as were popular last season. A newcomer that will be received widely for this year is Kolinsky, an essentially soft and feminine fur.

Expectancy marks the fur departments and the fur stores today. The business of selecting the cream of the late winter pelts has been done. The workrooms have finished their busiest months of the year in fashioning those pelts into attractive garments. The racks have been filled with a fascinating array of lovely coats and scarfs. All that remains is for the merchants to make their announcements, and for the feminine buyers to flock into the stores, to shop, to inspect and to buy.

That there will be brisk business is assured by the preliminary information that comes from all parts of the stocks, the variety of the offerings, the prices, and the terms under which most of the stores will be selling.

Capper to Put 'Teeth' in Kellogg Treaty

San Francisco, July 27 (AP)—Enforcement of the Kellogg-Briand peace pact ov an economic boycott on a belligerent nation, provided for in a resolution he will introduce in the United States Senate, was discussed today by Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas. The resolution, the senator said, would "put teeth" in the peace agreement, which he characterized as one of the greatest steps ever taken to bring about universal amity.

NEW BUICK ON SHOW TODAY

The 1930 Buick makes its debut today on the showroom floors of the Noyes Buick Sales Co. at 857 Commonwealth ave., and the Buick Sales Co. of Boston at 92 Massachusetts ave., and likewise at all other Buick dealers throughout Greater Boston and New England.

Covering every motoring need, meeting every preference in construction, body style and price, anticipating every ideal in performance, are three great new series of Buick models on three new wheelbases. Buick for 1930—the greatest Buick of them all—is larger and more luxurious. The famous Buick valve-in-head engines are even more powerful and exceptionally smooth throughout the entire speed range. Among the many other new features offered are the Buick controlled Servo internal mechanical brake, which function smoothly and positively, and are fully protected from dirt and water—a new steering gear with Buick shock eliminator, which make Buick steering practically effortless—a combination of semiellipitic springs and double-acting shock absorbers, improving the riding and handling of the new cars—the Fisher nonglare sloping V V windshield, making night driving increasingly safe—and, as an increased aid to driving efficiency, a thermostatically controlled automatic radiator shutter.

Frames are wider and lower, and newly-designed body brackets contribute longer life and freedo from body squeaks. The new bodies bear the stamp of Fisher craftsmanship. The result is a car of unusual beauty, fleet lines, and obvious comfort.

H. K. Noyes, president of the Noyes Buick Co., New England distributor, in referring to the 1930 Buick, says:

"Again Buick proves its right to supreme public preference in the fine car field. The tried and proven principles of Buick manufacture have found expression in a superb by beautiful new line of automobiles, destined to bring new luxuries to Buick's fame as a designer and builder of motor cars of unparalled performance. I firmly believe that the new Buick for 1930 will make the loyalty of Buick owners increasingly great and will add to Buick's list of friends many additional new names."

Will Open Bridge Over Champlain

Crown Point, N. Y., July 27—The last week in August will witness the completion of an important engineering feat in the first vehicular bridge ever to span Lake Champlain, which for the last year has attracted the attention of all eastern America to this region.

Soviet Russia, Acting Like Bully, Threatens World Peace

ON the face of the facts that have thus far come out of the Far East concerning the dispute over the Chinese Eastern Railway, which taps the rich province of Manchuria, the Soviet Government of Russia appears to be acting the part of a big bully in its dealings with the Nationalist Government of China.

And the worst of it is that the big bully in this case seems bent upon disturbing the peace of the world by threatening the peace of the Pacific.

China's side of the Manchurian dispute has been laid before the world in a manifesto from the Nanking Government that rings with charges which Russia has yet to refute.

China charges that Russia broke the agreement of 1924 by the terms of which Russia relinquished political control of the Chinese Eastern Railway, engaged to operate that railroad as a purely commercial enterprise, and exchanged with China a solemn pledge that the two countries would not—

"Engage in propaganda against the political and social systems of either."

IN proof of this charge, China recites the discovery in Harbin of abundant proof of secret plotting by Russian agents to destroy the unification of China and to organize a corps of assassins to operate in Nanking, Manchuria and other important centers. China declares that this was the grave provocation that prompted the Manchurian authorities in their own defense to arrest the Communists guilty of this conspiracy and return them to Russia.

Thereupon Russia sent an ultimatum to China that demanded compliance with every condition within three days.

Within the time limit China replied with a conciliatory note inviting a peaceful negotiation of the dispute.

Russia's rejoinder to this reply was to break off all diplomatic and consular relations with China and order all Chinese officials out of Russia.

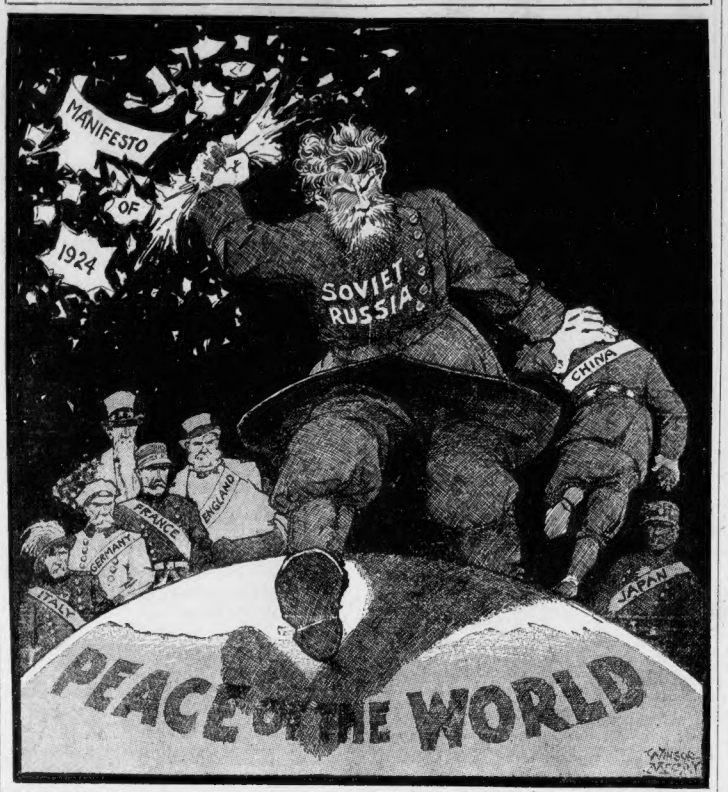
HISTORY appears to have been repeating itself in China's recent experience with the Soviet Government of Russia. What China charges Russia's Communist agents with doing in Manchuria, the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany and Japan well know other Communist agents of Russian have attempted to do in their respective countries.

RED RUSSIA GOES ON A RAMPAGE



France was forced to demand the recall of the Soviet Ambassador from Paris.

Great Britain was compelled to break off relations with the Soviet Government because of the discovery in London of the same sort of proof of the same sort of Soviet plottings that China unearthed in Harbin.

And Germany, Japan, and the United States have more than once been compelled to deport conspirators against their own peace and safety acting in the name, and apparently on behalf, of the organized tyranny that holds all Russia in its grip today.

IN the light of the proof that is piling up not only in the Far East, but in other corners of the world, that the Soviet Government of Russia is waging unceasing warfare against democracy everywhere, it begins to look as if the democracy of the world will finally be forced to take up this challenge and combat the tyranny of Russia.

For the Soviet Government today is NO LESS TYRANNICAL in its treatment of the Russian people than was the Czar's government.

And the tyranny in Russia today is no less a tyranny because it calls itself popular government.

Under the Communist Government of Russia freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of worship, freedom of thought, freedom of conscience, freedom to work or not to work have one and all been taken away from the Russian people.

The truth is that the Communists of Russia, LIKE THE PROHIBITIONISTS OF AMERICA, are enamored of a name, indifferent to facts, and utterly contemptuous of actual conditions.

THERE is less popular liberty in Russia at this moment than in any other country on the face of the globe. And if the Soviet Government is permitted by the rest of the world to continue its plottings against the peace of the world, the tyranny of Russia will follow the Soviet flag.

There is no graver menace to democracy today than the yoke of tyranny which the Soviet Government has pressed down upon the people of Russia.

And democracy in its own defense cannot afford much longer to be blind or deaf or dumb in the face of the threats to the peace of the Pacific that are now coming out of Moscow.

General, or Not, the Lady Is of Rank

Much ado is being made over the declaration by Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers of Lowell, Member of Congress, that she is a general by virtue of the fact that Congress had passed a law that all members of its august body were awarded that rank at a special session.

The newspapers mildly report Maj.-Gen. Preston Brown, Commander of the First Corps Area, as being "a bit annoyed" when Mrs. Rogers insisted that she is entitled to rank as a general. A general's salute of 13 guns was fired when Mrs. Rogers and Gen. Brown visited the Portland forts for inspection. No decision has as yet been rendered as to whom this salute honored.

However that may be, we refuse to believe that so excellent a gentleman and so good a soldier as Gen. Brown could be "annoyed" when a lady claims what she is apparently rightfully entitled to. And yet he might exclaim with Saturninus: "We have lost a good captain to make an ill general."

Railroads Are Better Off

It is a good business augury for New England to know that both our railroads, North and South, the Boston & Maine and the New York, New Haven and Hartford, which have been through some pretty lean years are well on the up grade.

Earnings on the Boston & Maine have been showing increases and the lifting of the five per cent dividend stock ban on the New Haven common shares shows that its affairs are better than ordinary. This ban was imposed by the Legislature in order to restrain the railroad from payment of increased dividends until certain contingencies had been taken care of in the way of subsidiary and leased lines. The wisdom of the Legislature in imposing this restriction is thus vindicated.

New England cannot be more prosperous than the railroads which serve it, and so here is every reason for congratulation.

Listen, World!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

MARY is the wife of a traveling salesman.

Yes, you guessed it right—there's trouble.

Mary has to send the Big Boy's suit to the dry cleaner, and naturally she must go through the pockets first.

AND ALMOST EVERY TIME SHE DOES SHE FINDS GIRLS' ADDRESSES — WRITTEN IN HUBBY'S OWN HAND!

He has been a good husband—never given her a moment's anxiety outside of that, so she hasn't even mentioned the subject to him, —but she worries and worries and WORRIES.

And now she writes to ask if I honestly believe that "all traveling salesmen chase around with other women."

OF COURSE I DON'T!

Let me tell you something, Mary! WOMEN AREN'T HALF AS MUCH OF A TREAT TO THE AVERAGE MAN AS WE GIRLS THINK THEY ARE.

This isn't merely a pretty theory of mine. I have had an unusual chance to prove it by actual experience. For years men were my only companions in the woods and mines. Often, for months at a time, I saw no women.

Your particular man MAY be chasing—I can't pass on that. But the mere fact that he's carrying around a bunch of girls' addresses doesn't prove it.

Did you ever go through a little boy's pockets? You will find every sort of loot there—from bird springs to fish worms. There's something in a little boy's nature that makes him just naturally long to accumulate souvenirs.

AND THAT SOMETHING PERSISTS AFTER HE BECOMES A MAN. Your husband is probably accumulating female addresses just as he once accumulated fish worms. The chances are that he won't give them a second thought after he has once acquired them, but he loves the adventure of discovering them and likes to hug them around.

ALSO HE LIKES TO THINK WHAT A DEVIL HE IS—OR MIGHT BE!

EVERY MAN WHO'S WORTH SHUCKS WANTS TO THINK HE'S A HARD BOILED EGG.

AND EVERY WOMAN WHO HAS THE SENSE GOD GAVE A GOOSEBERRY WILL LET HIM THINK SO!

The BAER Facts

By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER

If we cannot get our faces on Government money, the next best thing is to get our hands on it.

The new, attractive, unfamiliar currency being issued in smaller sizes to replace the old mustard plasters is very fine business.

It will always be attractive. And, we are afraid, always unfamiliar.

The new dollar bills are short, squatty, and with wheel-base of about 33 cents.

Don't think we are panning the old dollar shin-plasters. They weren't bad.

Money is your best friend.

It's a shame it ain't your relative.

Abbreviated dollar bills are due to Secretary Mellon.

Over a billion pieces of the new papyrus documents have been shipped to Federal Reserve banks all over America. The old, dirty, nasty paper money will be sent to Washington to be burned.

Burning money, brothers, is the lowest form of arson.

When new money gets dirty they put it through the Government washing plant.

That's one laundry racket that Oong Wong Loo and Sing Hip can't get in on.

We once applied for a job as head soaper in the washing and ironing department, but Andy Mellon gave us the well-known wayfarer's rush.

The 1929 dollar bills are an inch shorter than the old ones.

Possibly, we shouldn't have brought the matter forth. Maybe you never saw one of the old ones.

Well, we will tell you about the old ones.

They are hard to get, too.

And when you tried to hold on to 'em, you found they were still soaped from the last cleansing.

Figuring the whole thing out on our tea-coat yardstick, we must admit that this is a very unpleasant subject.

We know what we are talking about. But we haven't anything to prove it.

How are YOUR folks?

Meditations of a Wife

By HELEN ROWLAND

THERE are times when a wife almost wishes that she had married some other man, so that her husband would enjoy making love to her.

The biggest thrill of a modern young couple's lives is when the first little stranger arrives.

No, I don't mean the first baby, I mean the first little roadster, or the first little sport car.

Women weep at weddings because they have a subconscious feeling that one more pair of sweet eyeing things is writing "Finis" at the end of the Book of Romance.

It has gotten so that you can tell, just by the way a man honks his motor horn, whether he's a gentleman trying to say, "Pardon me, please"—or a tin-horn sport saying, "Hey, youze! Get off the earth!"

It's what you see in a man that makes you fall in love with him; but it's what you OVERLOOK that helps you to keep on being in love with him.

Most mothers and fathers wake up these days to discover that they are loved just like a traffic cop.

Bachelor: The widow's consolation, the divorcee's delight, the matron's convenience, the spinster's hope—and the flapper's Waterloo.

A modern man would no more think of turning around to stare after a beautifully shaped pair of legs than he would think of turning around to stare after a beautifully shaped taxicab.

A woman's idea of ENOUGH (money, love or flattery) is always "just a little bit more."

SEEING AMERICA

By O. O. McIntyre

HOLLYWOOD, July 27—All Hollywood boulevard needs to complete the Broadway picture is a Times Building. It has almost the same electric brilliance, the same faces, and the same manners. And with the arrival of the talkies Broadwayites have descended upon it with the rush of seven year locusts on a Nebraska wheat field.

Even Memphis, the newsboy, who came here with his dream of movie fame and is now snagged on a Hollywood corner crying the latest editions, says with philosophic content: "All my life my goal was New York. Things come to those who wait. I waited long enough and New York came to me."

In New York the Hotel Astor has long been the clearing house of movie, stage and vaudeville gossip. This clearing house has now moved to the Hotel Roosevelt on Hollywood boulevard. Ninety-five per cent of its patrons register from Bagdad-on-the-Subway. All the new movie help stops there—if they know their onions.

One of the principal owners is Norma Talmadge's husband, Joe Schenck. The inn got away to a bad start. A big stockholder is Sid Grauman, that astute little ex-newsboy showman with a wild mop of bushy hair. Grauman is the Ziegfeld of the west coast movie houses.

He sensed the Broadway invasion when the films began to stutter. He applied showmanship to hotel keeping. Every theatrical personage from the lowliest ham to the star was given a "night" in the grill of the Roosevelt. He knew the Broadway vanity. And the hotel prospered.

The headquarters of what was once New York's Tin Pan Alley is now the lobby of the same hotel. Those sad young men of bingo-banjo land are here en masse. The movie theme song has made Hollywood the popular muster for El Dorado. A hit song in Hollywood means financial independence.

And those White Way wits who wasted bright nifties on befoozled night club stay outs are now cashing in on their talents. A good gag essays almost as high as a good whatever-you-think-up. The lad who can put over the fast ones is knee deep in clover.

It is interesting to watch the Broadway actor expand under the climatic and scenic novelty of his semi-tropical environment. Used to breakfasting in the middle of the afternoon, he has finished a half day's work by noon. He is in bed by 10 o'clock most of the time and his out door life has given him a bronze tinge. There's a Ripley Believe It or Not—an actor with a tan! He is learning to play tennis, golf and hikes over the mountain trails and snares a few trout. He is changed in every way but one. He talks as big and loud as ever.

This morning in my hotel room I was this way and that way—as who is not?—watching a window washer on the sill of the ninth floor window across the way. It seemed to me he was risking his neck unnecessarily by dancing about and waving at people below. Finally he began juggling two sponges, suddenly missed his step and plunged downward with a sickening rush. My throat went dry and the horizon black. I peered cautiously into the street. The soandso had been caught in a net and a half dozen movie cameras were clicking merrily.

The brightness of Hollywood is dimmed by the pathetic army of extras. They are up early for the trek to studio casting agencies to hear the monotonous: "Sorry, nothing today." Then they return to laze through the day on the boulevard benches and other lounging places. As an annual event for years I recognize the same faces. The futility of it all gives them the set expression of a Benda mask. In the studio lots they are considered incurable. They know success is impossible yet refuse to give up.

No idol is so idolized as the movie idol in Hollywood. When the rest of the world glances at their clay feet, they can be assured Hollywood will never forget. It is a paradise for Those who Never Come Back.

A German film star offered a big contract in the talkies refuses to learn English. And why should he? He sees most of the American movie actors getting along nicely without it. So why be ridic?
